Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has for (a) expansion of the boundaries of the Garelochhead training area and (b) changes to the types of training authorised on the Garelochhead training area.

Mr. Soames: My Department has no plans at present to expand the boundaries of the Garelochhead training area, or to change the type of training carried out there.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many reports have been received since 1990 of infringements by aircraft of the danger area over the Garelochhead training area.

Mr. Soames: None.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many training man-days have been conducted on the Garelochhead training area in each year since 1988; and what is the capacity, in terms of annual training man-days of the training area.

Mr. Soames: The following training man-days have been conducted on the Garelochhead training area each year since 1988:

Year
1989–90	95,875
1990–91	71,929
1991–92	82,345
1992–93	102,866
1993–94	63,289
1994–95	[1]58,289

[1] To date the potential capacity in annual training man days of the training area is approximately 130,000, although this depends on the type of training, availability of personnel and weather conditions.

NATO Armaments Depot

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the peak tonnage of armaments stored at the NATO armaments depot, Glen Douglas (a) in 1990 and (b) in 1994.

Mr. Soames: The peak tonnage of armaments stored at the NATO armaments depot—Glen Douglas was approximately 21,500 tonnes in 1990 and 27,400 tonnes in 1994.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) United Kingdom civilians, (b) non-United Kingdom civilians, (c) United Kingdom military and (d) non-United Kingdom military personnel were employed at the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation armaments depot, Glen Douglas, in 1990; what are the equivalent figures for 1994; and what are the planned employment levels for 1995.

Mr. Soames: The complemented posts for each year are shown in the table. The figures for 1995 do not allow for any changes which may be implemented as a result of defence costs study decisions.

United Kingdom civilians	97	117	117
Non-United Kingdom civilians	—	—	—
United Kingdom military	—	2	2
Non-United Kingdom military	19	—	—

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what tonnage of armaments is being transferred to the NATO armaments depot, Glen Douglas, from other military establishments as a result of base closures and realignments; when he expects the transfers to be completed; and if he will list those categories of armaments for which Glen Douglas is now responsible.

Mr. Soames: Approximately 8,800 tonnes of armaments have been transferred into NATO armaments depot, Glen Douglas from RAF Chilmark, the final load arrived on 3 November 1994. Additionally, some 680 tonnes were transferred from RNAD Trecwn; that task is also complete. Consideration is being given to the transfer of a small amount of conventional ammunition from RNAD Beith to Glen Douglas as part of defence costs study proposals announced on 14 July, but final decisions have not yet been taken. NATO armaments depot, Glen Douglas holds a range of conventional armament stores, the main categories of which are shells, pyrotechnics, cartridges, bombs and rockets.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total expenditure on capital projects at the NATO armaments depot, Glen Douglas, in each year since 1985; and what proportion of these sums have been financed by NATO.

Mr. Soames: Figures for the past three financial years are as listed. Details for earlier years are no longer held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The figures include works costs, fees and VAT. All expenditure shown was recoverable from NATO with the exception of VAT, which is a national responsibility.

1,265,000	645,000	1,434,000

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total tonnage of armaments delivered into and out of the NATO armaments depot, Glen Douglas, in each year since 1990; and what proportion was transported by (a) road, (b) sea and (c) rail.

Mr. Soames: Approximate information is given in tonnes in the table. Overall, 3 per cent. was transported by road, 88 per cent. by sea and 9 per cent. by rail.

Year	In	Out	Total
1990	4,726	7,008	11,734
1991	1,809	10,988	12,797
1992	5,528	8,011	13,539

Goose Bay

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the amount paid to the Canadian Government in the financial year 1993–94 for Royal Air Force use of Canadian forces base Goose bay; what is the estimated amount payable for the financial year 1994–95; and if he will make a statement on the discrepancy between the figures for the period 1987–88 to 1992–93 provided to the hon. Member for Dumbarton on 25 October 1993, Official Report, column 489, and those provided to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) on 21 January, Official Report, column 934.

Mr. Soames: The amount paid in the financial year 1993–94 was £14,300,000 and it is estimated that £12,300,000 will be payable in 1994–95.

The figures provided to the hon. Member for Dumbarton reflected the actual payments made each year to the Canadian Government. The table of figures provided to the hon. Member for Don Valley (Mr. Redmond) was, however, based on the actual costs incurred in each financial year, as it would not otherwise have been possible to provide the information in the format requested. Payments to the Canadian Government are based on estimated costs, with the subsequent adjustments being made to reflect the actual costs involved. These adjustments sometimes have to be made after the financial year to which they relate, and it is this that primarily accounts for the difference between the two sets of figures provided.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Royal Air Force's future requirement for practice firing of forward-firing ordnance by aircraft deployed to Canadian forces base, Goose bay for training.

Mr. Soames: The Royal Air force has no plans at present to undertake such training at Goose bay, Labrador.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proposals have been submitted to the Canadian authorities for training using portable surface-to-air defence systems in the training areas at Goose bay, Labrador.

Mr. Soames: The possibility of RAF regiment Rapier units being deployed to the practice training area was discussed at a Goose bay users' meeting in 1993; consideration of this has, however, been deferred until after the completion of the Canadian federal environmental assessment review process.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many training sorties were flown by Royal Air Force aircraft from Canadian forces base Goose bay in 1994; and by which types of aircraft.

Mr. Soames: RAF aircraft have flown 1,299 training sorties during the 1994 flying season at Goose bay—1,277 by Tornado GR1s and 22 by Hercules aircraft.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the national statement of requirements for facilities at Goose bay which was submitted to the Canadian authorities in 1991; and if he will list any changes made to the stated requirements since then.

Mr. Soames: It is not our practice to release internal planning documents of this kind.

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the Royal Air Force's requirements for ground-controlled interception training for aircrew deployed to Canadian forces base Goose bay.

Mr. Soames: The Royal Air Force has at present no plans to conduct ground-controlled interception training at Goose bay.

Clyde Submarine Base

Mr. McFall: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) civil and (b) military personnel were employed at the Clyde submarine base in each year since 1990; and how many of the civil employees were engaged on construction work.

Mr. Soames: Estimated number of MOD civilians and shore-based military staff employed at the Clyde submarine base, Faslane, in each year since 1990 are as follows. The construction of the Trident facilities was carried out by contractors. There was only limited involvement of MOD civilian staff in this work, details of which are not held centrally.

Year	Civilian personnel	Military personnel
1990	2,183	1,581
1991	2,310	1,551
1992	2,224	1,486
1993	2,362	1,418
1994	2,460	1,357

Gulf War Veterans

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will seek to obtain from his American counterpart the evidence presented to the United States Department of Defence by Gulf war veterans of statistically significant rates of increased morbidity in children born to Gulf war veterans and of genetic deformations in offspring born to Gulf war veterans; and if he will institute an inquiry into the mortality and morbidity statistics of children born to British Gulf war veterans since they returned from service in the Gulf.

Mr. Soames: My Department remains in close contact with the United States authorities over all aspects relating to the alleged Gulf war illnesses. We are aware of claims of increased birth defects and childhood illnesses among the families of certain United States armed forces units and understand that these have been investigated by the appropriate authorities and shown to be unfounded. Wider statistics relating to birth defects reported by United States Gulf veterans indicate that the incidence of such defects is no higher than among the general population. In the United Kingdom, similarly, there is currently no evidence to suggest that the incidence of genetic defects and mortality among the children of Gulf veterans' families is any higher than the national average. We do, however, urge those who are concerned to come forward for assessment to allow us to increase the statistical and clinical database available to us.

Quangos

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many quangos his Department was responsible for (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which a number is available;

(2) which quangos his Department has abolished since 1979.

Mr. Soames: A full list of non-departmental public bodies, in existence for each year since 1979, is available in the following publications: "Report on Non-Departmental Public Bodies", Pliatzky Report, Cm 7797, January 1980, "Non-Departmental Public Bodies: Facts and Figures 1980", and "Public Bodies", published annually from 1982. Copies of these publications are available in the Library of the House.

For each year since 1986, lists have been prepared centrally of public bodies which have been created and abolished. Copies will be sent to the Libraries of both Houses. Such summary data for the years 1979 to 1985 were not prepared and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Medical Officers

Ms Corston: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence in what circumstances it would be possible for a civilian junior hospital doctor with full medical registration to take up a post in a Royal Air Force medical centre as a Royal Air Force medical officer without attending the courses at RAF Cranwell, RAF Halton and RAF Farnborough.

Mr. Soames: None. Before a civilian junior hospital doctor with full medical registration can take up a post in a RAF medical centre as an RAF medical officer, he or she must attend a specialist entrant and re-entrant commissioning course at RAF Cranwell, followed by medical officer training at RAF Halton and RAF Farnborough.

Personal Weapons Test

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what proportion of all infantry personnel completed their annual personal weapons test in 1993–94; and what was the pass rate achieved by infantry soldiers.

Mr. Soames: In 1993–94, 93 per cent. of all infantry personnel completed the annual personal weapons test; the pass rate achieved by infantry soldiers was 91 per cent.

Fuses

Ms Janet Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the orders, and their value, which have been placed by his Department for the L56 105mm fuse and the LS8 120 mm fuse, or their equivalents, since 1984.

Mr. Freeman: We have assumed that the question relates to the L56 and L58 fuse. No orders for these fuses, or any equivalent fuse, have been placed by my Department since 1984.

Western European Union

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards the Western European Union following the Noordwijk Council of Ministers meeting.

Mr. Soames: We remain committed to developing the Western European Union as the means to strengthen the European pillar of the alliance and as the defence component of the European Union. We shall continue to contribute to the development of its operational planning, and to other aspects of its work.

Future Large Aircraft

Dr. David Clarke: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his French counterpart concerning the future large aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence met Mr. Leotard at Chartres on 18 November 1994, when they had a wide-ranging discussion on topics of mutual interest, including the future large aircraft.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the names of the senior British experts who are to study possible British participation in the future large aircraft; what will be their terms of reference; when they will start their study; and what time scale they will have before reporting their findings.

Mr. Freeman: The chief of defence procurement, Dr. Malcolm McIntosh, will be the senior British representative. The first meeting is expected to be early next month and the terms of reference for the study will be decided then. A date for the study report has yet to be decided.

Management Consultants

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which firms are currently hired by his Department to carry out management consultancy work.

Mr. Freeman: A central list of companies providing management consultancy work to my Department does not exist and could be drawn up only at disproportionate cost.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to date of management consultants hired to analyse the privatisation of the royal dockyards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Payments made or outstanding specifically for management consultancy advice given on the proposed privatisation of the royal dockyards between 18 October 1993, when my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced our policy on the future management of the dockyards—Official Report, 18 October 1993, columns 39–41—and 31 October 1994 total some £2·2 million.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy towards the use of management consultants; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility and accountability for the employment of external management consultants have been largely delegated in my Department to budget holders at all levels. These budget holders take fully into account their obligations for the proper and economical use of their resources, including the use of competition, when considering in what circumstances and to what extent they should call on such services.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost of management consultants hired by his Department in each of the past five years.

Mr. Freeman: Individual budget holders in my Department have delegated powers to employ external assistance as they think fit within the limit of their resources. No central figure for the costs of this assistance is available and one could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Trident

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the announcement by the United States' Deputy Defence Secretary, on 16 August, regarding United Kingdom plans to buy Trident D5 missiles.

Mr. Freeman: The statement attributed to the United States Defence Secretary concerned United States plans for its 1996 budget and referred to current United Kingdom planning assumptions. Final decisions have yet to be taken on further missile purchases.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's latest estimate of the cost of the total D5 missile purchases.

Mr. Freeman: The current total estimated cost of Trident D5 missile purchases is £1,275 million at 1993–94 prices.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been committed to the purchase of Trident D5 missiles from the United States to date.

Mr. Freeman: At the end of August 1994, some £718 million at outturn prices had been committed on the purchase of Trident D5 missiles from the United States.

Procurement

Dr. David Clark: to ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's policy concerning European procurement co-operation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My Department's policy concerning European procurement co-operation is set out in paragraphs 433 and 434 of the "statement on the Defence Estimates 1994," Cm 2550.

Gulf War Syndrome

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if members of the armed forces serving in the Gulf war were made aware of the medical implications and side effects of taking nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets.

Mr. Soames: All United Kingdom military personnel routinely take part in nuclear, biological and chemical defence training. This training includes instruction on the purpose and proper administration of nerve agent pre-treatment set—NAPS—tablets. Specific reference to side- effects was not made during Operation Granby, since, when taken at the stated dose, side-effects occur only in a minority of individuals, are minor in nature and cease when the tablets are no longer taken. Instructions on the NAPS packet make clear that the stated dose should not be exceeded and this point is emphasised in training.

Nerve Agents

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if the nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets administered to members of the British armed forces in the Gulf war had been put through the normal medical trials; and if he will make a statement;

(2) What tests were carried out at the Chemical and Biological Weapons Establishment at Porton Down to analyse the effects of prolonged use of nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets.

Mr. Soames: These are matters for the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, Porton Down, under its framework document. I have asked its chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

QUESTION 25, ORDER PAPER DATED 22 NOVEMBER 1994

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking what tests were carried out at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment at Porton Down to analyse the effects of prolonged use of nerve agent pretreatment set tablets has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As such it is necessary to evaluate the effectiveness of medical countermeasures.

3. A number of studies were carried out using Service volunteers to evaluate the acceptability of using pyridostigmine bromide and whether such use had adverse side effects or was affected by the nature of the duties of the Service personnel. These studies which lasted for up to eight weeks included the assessment of the effects of NAPS on volunteers undergoing strenuous exercise and of a thermally stressful environment. No significant differences were found between subjects who had received a placebo and those who had received pyridostigmine bromide.

4. These studies concluded that pyridostigmine bromide in NAPS gives considerable protection against all organophosphorus nerve agents with no significant adverse effects. These results formed part of the Ministry of Defence's license application to the Medicines Control Agency which resulted in pyridostigmine bromide in NAPS being licenses under Product License Number 4537/0003.

1. Your Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Defence asking if the nerve agent pre-treatment set tablets administered to members of the British Armed Forces in the Gulf War had been put through the normal medical trials, and if he will make a statement has been passed to me to answer as Chief Executive of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment.

2. The role of the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment is to ensure that the United Kingdom Armed Forces have effective protective measures against the threat that chemical or biological weapons may be used against them. As such it is necessary to evaluate the effectiveness of medical countermeasures.

3. One of the current in-service medical countermeasures to nerve agents is the Nerve Agent Pretreatment Set (NAPS) which contains pyridostigmine bromide. This has been put through the normal medical trials and is a licensed drug. This only entered service after careful and considered evaluation. Following a series of animal studies pyridostigmine bromide was chosen for evaluation as an oral pre-treatment in man as it was a British Pharmacopoeial drug which appeared to combine efficacy and duration of action within an acceptable safety ratio.

4. Volunteer studies were carried out at CBDE to identify the effective oral dose regimen which in conjunction with therapy would provide protection against nerve agent poisoning whilst producing minimal or nil side effects under a range of conditions. The conclusion was that 8 hourly dosing with 30 mg of pyridostigmine bromide was acceptable.

5. Pyridostigmine bromide is listed in the British Pharmacopoeia and has been licensed in the United Kingdom since 1955 by Roche Products Limited as a treatment for myasthenia gravis, paralytic ileus and post-operative urinary retention. In adults with myasthenia gravis the usual daily dose is in the range 300-1200 mg, often over a period of many years or for life. The NAPS daily dose is 90 mg.

6. Pyridostigmine bromide is licensed to the Ministry of Defence by the Medicines Control Agency under Product License Number 4537/0003 for use in the pre-treatment of Service personnel at risk from poisoning from organophosphorus nerve agent.

TREASURY

Income Tax

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the net revenue forgone as a result of the reduction in personal income tax for higher rate taxpayers introduced by the Finance Act 1988; and what has been the total number of beneficiaries in each year, by region.

Sir George Young: Cutting tax rates has improved incentives at all levels and has encouraged entrepreneurial initiative upon which the nation depends. The figures in the table take no account of any behavioural changes resulting from the changes in the higher rates of tax. We believe that if the former higher rates of tax had continued fewer people would now have achieved incomes on which the higher rates would be payable.

Information for 1992–93 is given in the table. Figures for earlier years were given in the reply to the hon. Member on 17 December 1993, Official Report, column 970. The table shows the direct revenue costs for a full year, compared with re-introduced tax rates of 45, 50, 55 and 60 per cent. The band widths for the tax rate schedule have been calculated by uprating the corresponding parts of the 1987–88 regime by movements in the retail prices index as in the statutory indexation formula. The estimates have been calculated to reflect only the changes in the higher rates of tax and exclude any effects of the introduction of independent taxation in 1990–91 and the restriction of mortgage interest relief to the basic rate from 1991–92. Some regional estimates are based on small samples and all amounts are given to the nearest £50 million.

Region of residence	Number of taxpayers benefiting and change in tax revenue resulting form abolition of rates in excess of 40 per cent. Numbers thousands	Amount £ million

Stamp Duty

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many (a) share transactions and (b) property transactions are recorded on which stamp duty was paid in the catchment area of each stamp duty office for the last three full years and in the first half of the current year.

Mr. Nelson: The following tables show the total number of transactions processed by local stamp office and, so far as figures are available, the number of callers using the public counter services.

Quangos

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer which quangos his Department has abolished since 1979.

Mr. Nelson: The Treasury has abolished the following non-departmental public bodies since 1979:

Body	Year abolished
The Property Advisory Panel	1980
Committee to Review the Functioning of Financial Institutions (The Wilson Committee)	1980
National Economic Development Council and Office	1992

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many quangos his Department was responsible for (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which a number is available.

Mr. Nelson: In each of the years requested my Department was responsible for the following number of non-departmental public bodies:

(a) 10 in 1978–79, as listed in the "Report on Non-Departmental Public Bodies" (Pliatzky Report Cm 7797, January 1980); and

(b) 9 in 1993, as shown in Public Bodies 1993 (including the Royal Mint Advisory Committee). In addition to those bodies shown in Public Bodies 1993, I also have some responsibility for making or approving appointments to a further 12 non-departmental public bodies.

Tobacco and Alcohol

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates his Department has made of the effect of tobacco duty on the family budgets of top, middle and lower-income families.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Data from the 1993 family expenditure survey suggest that top-income families spend around 1 to 2 per cent. of their total expenditure on tobacco, middle-income families spend around 2 to 3 per cent. and lower-income families around 3½ per cent. Duty is only part of the price of tobacco.

Inheritance Tax

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all the new reliefs from, offers against, and exclusion from inheritance tax that he has announced since April 1992; and in each case what is the expected number of beneficiaries in a full year and the cost of the relief.

Sir George Young: The following changes to inheritance tax have been announced since April 1992:

Announced March 1993:

Extension from three years to four years of the qualifying period after death during which land and buildings may be sold and the sale price substituted for the value at death.

Where an estate contains investments with quotations that have been suspended within a year after death, the investment, if unsold, may be valued for inheritance tax purposes at the value one year after death.

Announced November 1993:

Extension from one year to three years of the period during which business and agricultural property gift in lifetime may be sold and replaced by the donee with similar qualifying property without loss of relief.

Announced January 1994:

Provisions relating to settlements without interest in possession not to apply to assets held by corporate Lloyd's underwriters in premiums trust funds or ancillary trust funds.

Each of those four measures has a negligible cost and the total cost is estimated at less than £5 million in a full year. About 200 estates benefit from the extended qualifying period for the sale of land and buildings. The remaining changes have very few beneficiaries. The has been no change to the inheritance tax threshold, which has remained at £150,000 since March 1992.

Third-World Debts

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much has been granted in tax relief to the United Kingdom banks against possible default on third-world debts in each of the last 10 years.

Sir George Young: Provisions by banks operating in the United Kingdom for doubtful sovereign debt—mostly of third-world countries but which may include relatively small amounts for other countries—are estimated to have reduced corporation tax receipts in the last eight years by the following amounts:

1986–87	70
1987–88	190
1988–89	530
1989–90	510
1990–91	780
1991–92	120
1992–93	120

Estimates for earlier years are zero or small.
[1] Provisional.

Inflation

Mr. Bowden: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the increase in inflation for the year to September 1994 was due to changes in the price of (a) food, (b) housing and (c) other factors.

Mr. Nelson: Contributions to changes in all items RPI over the 12 months to September 1994 are given in table 3 of the publication "Retail Prices Index September 1994", CSO Business Monitor MM23, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Airports (Customs Officers)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those United Kingdom airports receiving scheduled flights from abroad which do not have full-time customs staff stationed at the airport.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom airports which receive scheduled flights but do not have full-time customs staff stationed at the airport are as follows:

Blackpool
Cardiff Wales
Dundee
Humberside
Leeds/Bradford
Manston

EEC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give the net gain or loss to Britain arising from EEC membership in (a) 1972–76, (b) 1977–81, (c) 1982–86, (d) 1987–91 and (e) 1992–93 in respect of budget contributions, additional food prices, manufactured trade with the EEC, total trade with the EEC and jobs.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: No. I have nothing to add to the replies that the Economic Secretary gave to the hon. Member on 17 March, Official Report, column 822 and 30 June Official Report, column 680 and the reply that my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave on 18 May, Official Report, column 470 in answer to very similar questions from the hon. Member.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list all those executive agencies regarded by Her Majesty's Government as unsuitable for privatisation.

Sir George Young: Privatisation is one of the options considered before agency status is agreed. The possibility of privatisation is reconsidered in all cases when an agency is reviewed, now normally every five years.

Lobbying Companies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list and date those occasions over the last two years, when Ministers or officials in his Department have met lobbying companies, prior to a decision being made on the subject of the meeting with the lobbying company.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 24 November 1994]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

TREASURY

Overseas Debt

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much debt owed to Britain by severely indebted low-income countries has been cancelled since the introduction of the Trinidad terms in 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The amount of official bilateral debt owed to Britain by severely indebted low-income countries which has been cancelled since 1990 is £610 million.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much debt owed to Britain by severely indebted low-income countries since 1990 has been rescheduled.

Mr. Nelson: The amount of official bilateral debt owed to Britain by severely indebted low-income countries which has been rescheduled since 1990 is £1·7 billion.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much debt owed to Britain by developing countries has been rescheduled since 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The amount of official bilateral debt owed to Britain by developing countries which has been rescheduled since 1990 is £3·4 billion.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much debt owed to Britain by developing countries has been cancelled since the introduction of the Trinidad terms in 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The amount of official bilateral debt owed to Britain by developing countries which has been cancelled since 1990 is £712 million.

Sub-Saharan Africa

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the countries of sub-Saharan Africa most in debt to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Nelson: The United Kingdom's biggest sub-Saharan debtors are Nigeria, Zambia, Sudan, Tanzania, Gabon and Congo.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the debt owed to Britain by the severely indebted low-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa has been cancelled since 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The amount of official bilateral debt owed to Britain by severely indebted low-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa which has been cancelled since 1990 is £214 million.

Miss Lestor: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much of the debt owed to Britain by the severely indebted low-income countries of sub-Saharan Africa has been rescheduled since 1990.

Mr. Nelson: The amount of official bilateral debt owed to Britain by severely indebted low-income countries of sub-Sarahan Africa which has been rescheduled since 1990 is £1·11 billion.

Share Settlements Systems

Mr. Cousin: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to introduce legislation to control share settlements systems, with particular reference to control of the exposure of holdings by market makers.

Mr. Nelson: Securities settlements systems are already governed by legislation, notably the Financial Services Act 1986 and the Companies Acts. New, computerised securities settlements systems such as CREST will require changes to the existing law. The Treasury is preparing regulations under section 207 of the Companies Act 1989 to allow such systems to operate. These regulations will not affect existing arrangements regarding control of the exposure of holdings by market makers.

Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list those agencies expected to take full pay delegation by 1 April 1995; and if he will identify separately all those agencies that already have delegated responsibility for pay.

Sir George Young: The following civil service organisations are already negotiating the pay and conditions of their own staff:

Agricultural Development and Advisory Service
HM Customs and Excise
Defence Research Agency
Driver and Vehicle Licensing Agency
Driving Standards Agency
Employment Service
Fire Service College
Forensic Science Service
Health and Safety Executive
HM Prison Service
Her Majesty's Stationery Office
Inland Revenue
HM Land Registry
Meteorological Office
Ordnance Survey
Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre
Royal Mint
Scottish Prison Service
Social Security Benefits Agency
Social Security Contributions Agency
Social Security Information Technology Services Agency
Valuation Office Agency
Vehicle Inspectorate

The following are expected to do so from April 1995:

Child Support Agency
Highways Agency
Historic Scotland
Intervention Board for Agricultural Produce
Meat Hygiene Service
Paymaster
Service Children's Schools (North West Europe)
War Pensions Agency

Inland Revenue, Cumbernauld

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many full-time and part-time staff are currently employed at the Inland Revenue office in Cumbernauld.

Sir George Young: The Inland Revenue employs 814 full-time and 260 part-time staff at the accounts office in Cumbernauld.

Imports

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will now bring up to date the import-home demand ratio as set out in ratio I in table 15.10 of the "Monthly Digest of Statistics" as published in 1987.

Mr. Nelson: It is the policy of the Central Statistical Office to publish and make available as much as possible of the data that it collects. Provisional data on import penetration will be included in the CSO's "Monthly Digest of Statistics" early in 1995.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer when and in what form the summaries of the import penetration figures on an industry basis from the CSO-Taylor Neilson A6 new business series will be made available to hon. Members.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Copies of "UK Markets" produced by CSO and Taylor Nelson AGB will become available during December and will be placed in the House of Commons Library.

Lobbying Companies

Mr. Fatchett : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the guidelines issued by his Department to regulate relationships with lobbying companies.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 14 November 1994]: Conditions of service for the staff of my Department incorporate the general principles of conduct that require civil servants not to misuse information which they acquire in the course of their duties; not to make use of their official position to further their private interests or those of others; and not to receive gifts, hospitality or benefits of any kind from a third party, which might be seen to compromise their personal judgment or integrity. Guidance for Ministers is set out in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers".

VAT (Fuel)

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the increase in VAT on fuel from April 1995 on the inflation rate.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 24 November 1994]: An increase of 2.9 per cent. in the retail prices index component index for gas would have the effect of adding around 0.05 percentage points to the percentage change over 12 months in the all items retail prices index.

EU Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what were the gross domestic product growth assumptions of each EU country on which his estimate of budget contributions was based.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The growth assumptions are for the Community as a whole and are based on real growth of 2.5 per cent. per annum and inflation of 2.5 per cent. per annum over the period 1995 to 1999.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what EC membership his calculation of budget contributions were based.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 25 November 1994]: Twelve.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the (a) net contributions per capital and (b) the gross contributions per capita in each EU country after the raising of the VAT ceiling is in force.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 25 November 1994]: I presume that the hon. Gentleman is referring to the proposed increase in the own resources ceiling.

The table shows each member state's net balance per capita to the 1993 Community budget.

Member States' Net Balances 1993 Community Budget

	Contributions Receipts	(billion ecu)	Net	Net balance per capita (ecu)
Belgium	2·4	2·5	-0·1	-10

"Allocation not applicable or available" refers mainly to development aid and administrative expenditure for the other institutions.

Future estimates would depend on what specific assumptions are made about the pattern of the European Community spending. I gave a broad assessment of likely developments in reply to the hon. Member for Moray

(Mrs. Ewing) on 24 November, Official Report, columns 353–54.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what assumptions about the sums agreed for the EU budget for each of the next five years, his assessment of the British net contribution in his letter to hon. Members was based.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 25 November 1994]: I presume that the hon. Member's intention was to ask on what assumptions my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer's assessment was based.

My right hon. and learned Friend's assessment was based on the assumption that the European Community budget will fully utilise the own resources ceilings in each of the years 1995 to 1999. Assuming 2.5 per cent. annual inflation in the Community, 2.5 per cent. annual growth in real Community GNP, and an exchange rate of £1=1.30 ecu, the figures are as follows:

Own resources ceiling (EC12, assuming increases agreed at Edinburgh)

55·5	59·1	63·1	67·4	71·4

The own resources ceiling is a limit on the revenue the Community can call up from the member states, not an entitlement to spend or a target for spending. The Community budget is negotiated annually within the framework of the financial perspective. It is therefore more than possible that in practice annual budgets will be smaller than assumed for the purposes of this assessment.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer on what assumptions of the allocations to Britain from the structural funds on which his estimate of the net United Kingdom contributions to the EC budget were based.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The assumption underlying the latest forecast of the United Kingdom net contributions is that our receipts from the structural funds will average around 8.6 per cent. per year. The United Kingdom's allocation is expected to decline slowly over the period of the forecast reflecting the changes in the allocation of the structural funds agreed at Edinburgh.

TRANSPORT

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Dr. Mawhinney: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. Such costs are covered by the entertainment expenditure for this Department, which is published in the annual report, copies of which are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Members' Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Dr. Mawhinney: This Department's Ministers intend to send 700 official Christmas cards at an anticipated cost of £668 to buy. Postage will cost approximately £175.00. The information regarding the cost in staff time to sign, address and place the cards in envelopes is not available.

I do not plan to place a sample copy of my official Christmas card in the Members' Library.

Driving Licences

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) which European countries currently do not have a system of photographs on driving licences;

(2) if he will list those European countries that currently have a system of photographs on driving licences, and indicate which of those countries have a written constitution.

Mr. Norris: All other member states of the European Union have driving licences with photographs. Most member states have some form of written instructions or legislation which could be regarded as a constitution.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the deadline for submissions on the consultation document "Photographs on Driving Licences"; and when the decision was taken to include photographs on driving licences.

Mr. Norris: The closing date for receiving comments as part of the consultation exercise is 30 November. We issued a press notice on 4 November 1991 announcing that photographs would be included on the British driving licence.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library the study into the main legal, privacy and administrative issues, referred to on page 1 of his Department's consultation document "Photographs on Driving Licences".

Mr. Norris: The study report is commercial in confidence. But I have arranged for a copy of the management summary to be placed in the Library.

A27

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the figures available in respect of the origins and destinations and types of vehicles using the existing A27 from Polegate to Lewes on dates subsequent to 1 January 1990; what are the figures available in respect of projections made for the years 2000, 2005 and 2010 in respect of the origins, destinations and types of vehicles using (i) the existing A27 and (ii) the proposed improved A27; what feasibility studies are being made in the use of tunnelling in connection with the proposed new A27; and when these are due to be published.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Malcolm Wicks, dated 28 November 1994:

The Minister for Railways and Roads, Mr. Watts, has asked me to write to you in reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the proposed improvement of the A27 between Lewes and Polegate in East Sussex as the information requested relates to operational matters of the Highways Agency.

East Sussex County Council carried out traffic counts on the A27 and the surrounding road network during 1993 to enable us to compile information on the origins and destinations of vehicles using the A27 in the area. The raw data has been submitted to the Agency but it has not yet been analysed. A considerable amount of work will need to be done to translate the figures into 'readable' facts. I am therefore unable to supply you with the information you requested at this stage. I will arrange for it to be sent to you as soon as possible, but this is unlikely to be before the middle of next year. The data from this survey will be used to inform the detailed design stage.

Similarly, there are no future year projects available in the form requested. However, Annual Average Daily Traffic (AADT) flows have been predicted using 1990 traffic survey data. The attached table sets out the low growth (LG) and high growth (HG) figures for the A27 with and without the proposed improvement for the years you requested.

A proposal for a tunnel south of Mount Caburn was rejected as uneconomic and not without environmental problems in the preferred route statement issued in July 1993.

We have however, undertaken to look at measures to reduce the impact of the preferred route on the surrounding area during the detailed design stage. This will include considering alternative means of crossing the Glynde Reach at a lower level than the bridge included in the preferred route proposals. I am afraid it is too early to say when this work will be completed.

A40

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he will announce the detrunking of the A40 through Cheltenham.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Nigel Jones, dated 28 November 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Railways, Mr. Watts, has asked me to reply to your Parliamentary Question about the timing of an announcement regarding the detrunking of the A40 through Cheltenham.

As you know it is intended to detrunk the A40 through Cheltenham, and trunk the A436 from Shipton Solers to Air Balloon following the completion of the A417 Brockworth bypass which includes a new junction with the M5.

Earlier this year consultants reported on the improvements needed to enable the A436 to cater for the expected increase in traffic in the longer term. They also identified cost effective minor measures which can be implemented quickly. Discussions are now being held with Gloucestershire County Council on the procedures and agreements required to take forward the statutory trunking and detrunking orders, but I am not yet in a position to be able to say when these orders will be published.

Air Traffic Control

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when the hon. Member for Coventry, North-East will receive the letter on air traffic control training in Kent, referred to in his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 962.

Mr. Norris: I have written to the hon. Member today and have placed a copy of my letter in the Library.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the average and the median time his Department has taken to pay suppliers in each of the last 12 months; and what proportion of bills it took more than six weeks to pay.

Mr. Norris: The average time taken to dispatch a payment document was 18 days, the median being 20 days. A total of 4.8 per cent. took more than six weeks to pay.

Rail Electrification

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects final agreement between all interested parties involved with the west Yorkshire electrification scheme; what is the latest estimated total cost of the scheme; what were the previous estimated total costs; by whom rolling stock is to be supplied and at what cost; when the scheme is expected to be fully operational; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: These are matters for the West Yorkshire passenger transport executive, Railtrack and the train operating unit. However, I understand that discussions are in progress to determine the final scheme cost; that progressive completion and introduction of electric services are planned from spring 1995 onwards and that the PTE is exploring options with the rolling stock companies and other parties for the replacement of the class 308s which will operate the electric local services initially.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. Dorrell: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. Such costs are covered by my Department's entertainment expenditure, which is contained within the running costs expenditure published in its annual report.

The Department of National Heritage and its agencies have spent the following sums on official hospitality in the two years since the Department was set up:

	Department of National Heritage £	Historic Royal Palaces Agency £	Royal Parks Agency £
1992–93	22,037	17,690	1,032
1993–94	18,278	16,374	8,541

Sports Council

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he intends to appoint management consultants on the restructuring of the Sports Council, on the terms he envisaged in his statement of 8 July, Official Report, columns 584–86.

Mr. Sproat: I am currently considering responses to the consultation on the Government's proposals set out in our 8 July statement. To assist me in this, I have asked the GB Sports Council to provide me with its own view of how its current functions and staffing might be realigned to take account of those proposals. In the light of my analysis, and this further work, I shall be taking final policy decisions and deciding on how these should be implemented.

Radio Authority

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many FM radio frequencies have been issued by the Radio Authority in the Greater London area; and what is the maximum number which may be issued.

Mr. Dorrell: The authority has awarded licences for 11 radio services to use FM frequencies in the Greater London area. The maximum number depends on frequency availability and on the operational characteristics and locations of the transmitters.

The Radio Authority has said that it does not envisage advertising any further London-wide licences in the foreseeable future, but intends to advertise more small-scale services for parts of the Greater London area over the next couple of years.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for ensuring that minutes of meetings of the Radio Authority are published.

Mr. Dorrell: None. Under the Broadcasting Act 1990, it is for the Radio Authority to determine its own procedures.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to ensure that a new radio frequency or frequencies can be allocated to a station or stations playing mainly young rock music.

Mr. Dorrell: None. The Government assign frequencies to the Radio Authority. Decisions on licences are a matter for the Radio Authority. Section 85 of the Broadcasting Act 1990, which describes the licensing functions of the Radio Authority, makes it clear that the authority must do all it can to secure a diversity of independent radio stations. Licence applicants are free to offer a young rock music format.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what report he has received from the Radio Authority as to its reasons for selecting Crystal and Virgin as the allocated stations for FM licences announced in March.

Mr. Dorrell: No report has been received. Licensing decisions are entirely matters for the Radio Authority.

Disabled Access

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what discussions he has had with film exhibitors and cinemas proprietors about the provision of access for people with disabilities to cinemas in Britain.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department has had informal discussions with the Cinema Exhibitors Association, which represents 95 per cent. of exhibitors on issues relating to access to cinemas for people with disabilities. The association responded to the consultation document on measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people published by the Government earlier this year.

Lobbying Companies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list and date those occasions in the last two years when Ministers or officials in his Department have met lobbying companies, prior to a decision being made on the subject of the meeting with the lobbying company.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 November 1994]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the guidelines issued by his Department to regulate relationships with lobbying companies.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 November 1994]: Conditions of service for the staff of my Department and its agencies incorporate the general principles of conduct that require civil servants not to misuse information which they acquire in the course of their duties; not to make use of their official position to further private interests or those of others; and not to receive gifts, hospitality or benefits of any kind from a third party which might be seen to compromise their personal judgment or integrity.

ENVIRONMENT

Council Housing (Maintenance Funding)

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what estimate he has made as to the knock-on effects of his Department's proposals to introduce a new system for calculating the management and maintenance allowances for local authority housing upon the social security budget.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We are consulting local authorities on the housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1995–96 and our proposals do not include changing the method of calculating the management and maintenance allowances.

Surveys

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library copies of the surveys of "Public Attitudes to the Environment" and "Public Attitudes to Planning (and Development)", the rent-to-mortgage leaflet follow-up, the Home Improvement Agency client survey and "Wasting Energy Costs the Earth".

Mr. Robert B. Jones: A copy of the survey of public attitudes to the environment has been placed in the Library of the House. A copy of the rent-to-mortgage leaflet follow-up survey report and a full report of the Home Improvement Agency client satisfaction survey will be placed in the Library shortly. A summary of the latter survey's findings is included in the publication "Review of the Home Improvement Agency Grant Programme", a copy of which has been placed in the Library. Research for the report on public attitudes to planning and on the Wasting Energy Costs the Earth campaign has yet to be completed.

Homelessness Legislation

Mr. Timms: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to reform the homelessness legislation in England and Wales.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction told the House on 18 July, Official Report, columns 21-23, we intend to introduce legislation when parliamentary time permits.

Single Regeneration Budget, Wirral

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what formal or informal conversations, or written correspondence, he or any of his staff have had with any of the Wirral's elected officers or officials on how the single regeneration budget might be spent in the Wirral.

Mr. Curry: Officials in the Government office for Merseyside held six meetings with officers of Wirral metropolitan borough council to discuss potential SRB bids, and wrote to the authority's chief executive in July with preliminary comments on the outline bids under consideration at the time.

Since the final bids were submitted in early September, no meetings or discussions have taken place and no indication has been given of the likely success or otherwise of individual bids.

One letter was sent to Wirral metropolitan borough council about the relationship between SRB bids and the European Union's urban initiative; and one of the bids has been referred to, but not discussed, in meetings and correspondence about the future of the Cammell Laird shipyard site.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost to public funds of the Local Government commission review into local government reorganisation to date; and if he will make a statement regarding its progress.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Local Government Commission for England incurred expenditure of £2·056 million in 1992–93 and £5·146 in 1993–94. We are making available grant in aid of some £8·300 million to the commission for 1994–95.

The commission has published final recommendations for 19 shire counties, of which three have been referred back to the commission for further review. Final reports on the remaining counties, including the three second reviews, are due to be submitted to the Secretary of State by the end of the year.

Ofwat

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what redress is available to a member of the public who is dissatisfied with an investigation carried out by Ofwat;

(2) what powers he has to review investigations carried out by Ofwat.

Mr. Atkins: The Director General of Water Services has a duty to consider any complaint made by a customer or potential customer which is referred to him by a customer service committee because it remains unresolved; he also has a duty to consider complaints from customers that a CSC has failed to perform any of its duties. The Secretary of State does not have powers to review investigations carried out by Ofwat, but the parliamentary ombudsman can investigate complaints of personal injustice resulting from Ofwat's administrative actions.

Canvey Island

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made with respect to the section 106 agreement with Aldersgate, in respect of land on Canvey Island; and when he will commence the promised public consultation prior to agreement being finalised.

Sir Paul Beresford: We will be writing to Aldersgate Developments and other interested parties shortly about the company's draft section 106 documents and the issues which they raise.

Overcrowding

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many tenants are currently estimated to be living in overcrowded accommodation.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest estimate for England is that about 310,000 tenants had fewer bedrooms than the bedroom standard in 1993–94. This figure is from the 1993–94 survey of English housing and is subject to sampling error.

Estate Action

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he will take to maintain estate action funding should the funds available for these projects from the single regeneration budget be reduced.

Mr. Curry: All commitments under the estate action programme which has been subsumed within the single regeneration budget will continue to be honoured.

Flue Gas Desulphurisation

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps the Government will be taking to ensure the completion of the flue gas desulphurisation fitting programmes (a) at Drax power station and (b) at Radcliffe power station, and the use of FGD at these power stations.

Mr. Atkins: Under part I of the Environmental Protection Act 1990, a condition may be included in the authorisation for a power station, to require its operator to install FGD and to run it whenever that power station is operated, provided that to do so would not be excessively costly and that there is no other preferable technique of preventing or, failing that, minimising and rendering harmless releases of sulphur dioxide, having regard to costs and efficacy.

As I indicated in answer to the hon. Member on 22 November, Official Report, columns 66-67, Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution is currently in discussion with the generators about their generating operations and improvement programmes for each station.

Housing

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many forms have to be completed by local housing associations applying for grants from the Housing Corporation to build affordable housing to meet local needs; and how many questions are on each form.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Four forms have to be completed by housing associations applying for project approval and grants from the Housing Corporation. A form is completed for each of the following: initial calculation to establish the grant rate for the scheme, application for project approval and grant, application for payment of grant, and the final grant claim. Each form is designed so that check marks can be placed in prepared boxes to ease completion. The first form comprises 14 questions, the second form 16, the third form four, and the fourth form has two questions relating to each house or flat in the scheme.

Electricity

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what part the Government expects Drax power station and Radcliffe power station to play in the market for providing clean electricity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Under the United Kingdom's national plan implementing the EC large combustion plants directive, each of the two generators in England and Wales is allocated an annual quota of maximum emissions of sulphur dioxides and oxides of nitrogen for the company's generating operations as a whole. Each company has the freedom to decide the distribution of its quotas between its individual power stations, taking account inter alia of market conditions, subject to meeting the conditions in individual site authorisations issued by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution under the Environmental Protection Act 1990.

As I indicated in answer to the hon. Member on 22 November, Official Report, columns 66–67, HMIP is currently in discussion with the generators about its generating operations and improvement programmes for each station.

Water Metering

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many disconnections there have been in the London borough of Lewisham in the past 12 months; how many of these disconnections are attributable to water metering; and what is Thames Water Utilities' programme for water metering in Lewisham.

Mr. Atkins: Data on disconnections by local authority district and by charging method are not available centrally. The Director General of Water Services publishes data on disconnections twice a year, by water company area and by domestic and non-domestic customer. Data on disconnections in the six months to 30 September 1994 were published in an Ofwat news release on 15 November, a copy of which is in the Library. I understand that Thames Water Utilities has yet to decide on its preferred future method of charging domestic customers for water and sewerage services but has a policy of metering all commercial customers. Most water companies meter all new and substantially altered domestic properties.

PRIME MINISTER

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

The Prime Minister: There are five special advisers in No. 10 Downing street.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points ranging from £19,503 to £67,609 or, in some cases, at a rate appropriate to a relevant civil service grade. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Prime Minister how many official Christmas cards he intends to send out in 1994; and how much these will cost.

The Prime Minister: I have nothing further to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member on 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 89.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to provide information via the Internet; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: My office is currently studying options to provide information via the Internet.

Mohamed Al-Fayed

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if he will set out the considerations which led the Cabinet Secretary not to interview Mohamed Al-Fayed in his investigations into allegations of improper behaviour by Government Ministers.

The Prime Minister: The Cabinet Secretary indicated his reasons in his report, which I published on 25 October 1994, Official Report, columns 521-22, and I have nothing further to add.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister if the Nolan committee will be interviewing Mohamed Al-Fayed in its examination of standards in public life; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: It is for the Committee on Standards in Public Life to decide whom it wishes to invite to give oral evidence.

Crown Appointments Commission

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister who are the current members of the Crown Appointments Commission.

The Prime Minister: The Crown Appointments Commission is a standing commission of the General Synod of the Church of England. Its membership is set out on page 38 of the current edition of the "Church of England Year Book", a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

Utility Regulators

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the Prime Minister if he will review the powers of the (a) gas and (b) other utility regulators over boardroom salaries, shareholdings and perks.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The utility regulators' role is to promote competition and operate price caps in areas of monopoly. Within this framework it is for each company and its shareholders to exercise control of board membership, pay and conditions.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Citizens Charter (Mr. Purnell)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) what representations he has received from Mr. David Hernandez Purnell; and what was his response;

(2) if he will make a statement regarding the letter of 13 November to the Treasury Solicitor from a constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich, a copy of which was forwarded to the citizens charter unit; and what assessment he has made of the conformity of Her Majesty's Government's action in this case with the spirit of the citizens charter.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Mr. Hernandez Purnell has been a frequent correspondent with Government Departments about the purchase of both his and his son's property by the Department of Transport. He has written over 400 letters to the Department of Transport alone. Further correspondence in which Mr. Hernandez Purnell himself has inquired about the role of the citizens charter in his complaint has been answered by officials from the citizens charter unit, and letters from the hon. Member of 3 and 22 September 1993 concerning Mr. Hernandez Purnell were replied to on 30 September 1993 by the then Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster.

The citizens charter and the citizens charter unit have only an indirect role in Mr. Hernandez Purnell's dispute with the Department of Transport. The role of the citizens charter unit is to work with Departments in developing their services in line with the principles of the citizens charter, and to encourage good practice in doing this. When members of the public write to the citizens charter unit, the unit tries to ensure that a prompt, full and clear reply is sent. Ultimately, however, it is the responsibility of individual public sector organisations, including Government Departments, to ensure that their services are delivered to charter standards. Where—as in Mr. Hernandez Purnell's case—correspondence from a member of the public concerns a dispute about departmental policy which is also the subject of legal proceedings, it is not the role of the citizens charter unit to act as an intermediary.

EDUCATION

College Lecturers

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) further education and (b) higher education lecturers retired early on the grounds of ill-health in the last 10 financial years.

Mr. Boswell: The available data do not enable distinction between further or higher education lecturers and other teachers who retire on health grounds within the teachers' superannuation scheme.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) part-time and (b) full-time lecturers in colleges of further education there were in each salary grade in each local education authority or otherwise appropriate areas in the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Boswell: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her Department's estimate of the total funds necessary to undertake essential health and safety repair work at colleges of further education.

Mr. Boswell: A professional survey of college buildings when they left local authority control in 1993 estimated the cost of essential health and safety repair work at £136 million.

Nursery Education

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how she plans to finance the expansion of nursery education, targeted through standard spending assessment or specific grant for (a) buildings and (b) revenue funding; and is she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: My right hon. Friend is now consulting widely a range of interests in pre-school education with a view to drawing up detailed proposals on how to achieve the target for expansion of pre-school provision set by the Prime Minister. The need for additional funding will be determined as part of the development of these proposals.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Legal Aid

42. Mr. Heppell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what legal aid will be available for employees wishing to sue their employers if industrial injuries legislation is changed.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Legal aid is available to employees who qualify for help with their legal costs in pursuing a claim for damages against an employer through the courts. I cannot anticipate the outcome of any future legislative changes.

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will consider making legal aid available to allow victims of crime or their families to seek appropriate professional advice.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Advice and assistance is already available to those financially eligible under the legal aid green form scheme.

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what is the latest annual figure paid for legal aid for non-United Kingdom citizens.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information sought is not collected.

Magistrates (Poppies)

46. Mr. David Evans: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what advice his Department gives magistrates about wearing British Legion poppies in court.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None. For myself I have always accepted the British Legion's suggestion that we should wear our poppies with pride and with humble appreciation, too, of those who made great sacrifices for our freedom.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by the Lord Chancellor's Department and Government agencies answerable to this Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. Such costs are covered by the entertainment expenditure for the Lord Chancellor's Department, which is contained in the running costs expenditure published in the annual report, copies of which are in the Library of the House.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many official Christmas cards the Lord Chancellor and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much of these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card the Lord Chancellor intends to send this year.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is as follows:

	Amount (Estimate)	Purchase Price (Estimate)	Postage Cost (Estimate)		Cost in Staff Time
			UK	Overseas
Lord Chancellor	250	Own Purchase	£38	£33	Not available
Parliamentary Secretary		£12	£6	Not applicable	Not available
	50	£15 with VAT

I will be placing a sample copy of the Christmas card the Lord Chancellor intends to send—when available—in the Member's Library.

Defamation

Mr. Couchman: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans Her Majesty's Government have to reduce the cost and complexity of defamation proceedings.

Mr. Waller: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department when he intends to bring forward legislation relating to the law of defamation.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In December 1992, the Lord Chancellor announced his intention to introduce a number of reforms which we believe will be of great assistance to parties seeking speedy and economic disposals of defamation claims, and the reforms which could be achieved by amending rules of court have already been implemented. Also, we have made considerable progress in developing a precise framework for the further reforms foreshadowed in that statement and on which the Lord Chancellor intends to introduce legislation as soon as he has a suitable opportunity. These reforms include a new defence, recommended by a working group under the chairmanship of Lord Justice Neill, which will avoid the need for a trial if the defendant is prepared to offer amends and pay damages assessed by a judge.

In addition, there will be a new summary procedure, under which every defamation claim will come before the judge at an early stage. He will assess whether the claim is suitable for summary disposal, or whether it should go for trial, with or without a jury. He will have power on summary disposal to award damages up to a fixed ceiling. We believe that the procedure will help the parties to clarify the real issues much earlier, and encourage sensible settlements, as well as providing a fast track for the disposal of straightforward claims.

Court Proceedings

Mr. Stephen: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department whether he will make available to the public, on request, cassette copies, at cost, of the whole or part of all tape recordings of court proceedings heard in public.

Mr. John M. Taylor: A member of the public who is not a party to an action may only have a transcript of recordings of court proceedings with the prior leave of a district judge in civil cases, and of a chief clerk in criminal cases. There are no plans to change these arrangements.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what are his responsibilities in relation to following up the crash of Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie.

Mr. John M. Taylor: None.

Barristers and Solicitors

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what plans he has to encourage the closer working together of barristers and solicitors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John M. Taylor: Barristers and solicitors are members of the legal profession, which is independent of Government. It would, therefore, not be appropriate for either the Lord Chancellor or me to determine the closeness of their working arrangements. However, we would both wish to support any initiatives on the part of the legal profession which accord with the principles of the Courts and Legal Services Act 1990, by making provision for new or better ways of providing legal services while maintaining the proper and efficient administration of justice.

Lawyers (Complaints)

Sir Keith Speed: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what assessment he has made of the time taken to answer complaints about lawyers by the appropriate legal bodies.

Mr. John. M. Taylor: The legal professions function independently of Government. I have no responsibility for monitoring the time taken to answer complaints made to bodies within the professions.

The Lord Chancellor is responsible for the appointment and monitoring of the legal services ombudsman, who investigates complaints about the manner in which complaints about lawyers made to the appropriate legal bodies have been, or are being, dealt with. This will include any complaints relating to time taken in investigation.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Norman Shaw North

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee (1) what has been the cost of work on the three main lifts in the Norman Shaw north building over the last 12 months; who authorised that work; and on how many working days one or more of those lifts have been out of operation during the last year;

(2) what has been the cost of renovating the rear lift in the Norman Shaw north building; who authorised that work; and whether the lift has been working satisfactorily since the work was completed.

Mr. Ray Powell: All three lifts in Norman Shaw north were badly affected by a burst pipe which occurred on 10 October. Two electric motors had to be taken away for rewinding and there was a spate of other minor problems resulting from the flood damage, which altogether cost some £14,000 to repair. The annual maintenance cost for each lift is estimated to be £1,500. The information requested on the number of working days when the lifts did not operate could be compiled only at a disproportionate cost.

The cost of the work to replace the rear lift was £73,000. The work was approved by the Accommodation and Works Committee as part of the rolling programme of lift replacement and refurbishment. The contractor has had to correct several teething problems since the lift was installed, but I believe that these have been overcome and that normal service should now continue. The Director of Parliamentary Works is monitoring the situation carefully.

The combination of the planned lift replacement work on the rear and the unforeseen damage to the three main lifts has resulted in a poor lift service to users of the building over the past few months. Every effort is being made to ensure that a reliable service is provided in the future.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices, and official residences.

Mr. Heseltine: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. The DTI's expenditure on official hospitality since 1990 was published in the answer to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 26 October, column 654.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department does not commission its own departmental Christmas card. Individual Ministers may choose to send cards. While specific lists of addressees have yet to be drawn up, it is expected that Ministers will send in the region of 500 cards at an expected average cost of 75p each. Cards for recipients within the United Kingdom will be sent second class. It is not possible to predict accurately the amount of staff time that will be required to process the cards.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Heseltine: My Department employs three special advisers.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Insolvency Service

Ms Mowlam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what external legal advice he has received on the impact of privatisation of the Insolvency Service on the future disqualification and prosecution of bankrupts;

(2) what advice he has received in respect of the application of the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 in the event of the privatisation of the Insolvency Service;

(3) if he will publish in full the report of the consultants Stoy Hayward into privatisation of the Insolvency Service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Stockton, South (Mr. Devlin) on 3 November 1994, Official Report, columns 1251-52.

Ms Mowlam: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the efficacy of investigations begun by the Insolvency Service but completed in the private sector, in the event of privatisation of the service.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Stoy Hayward Consulting reported that the contracting out of official receivers administrative functions would enable official receivers to concentrate more on their investigatory role. Under such arrangements investigations begun by contractors would be completed by official receivers.

Post Office

Mr. Cohen : To ask the President of the Board of Trade what has been the total cost, including the cost of using consultants, of the review of possible privatisation in respect of the Post Office; and how much has been paid to each consultant.

Mr. Eggar: The Government announced their intention to privatise Parcelforce on 15 July 1992, Official Report, column 1137, and announced the review of the structure and organisation of the Post Office on 29 July 1992. From those dates to the date of the Government's decision that they would not, for the present, be proceeding with legislation on the Post Office, a total of £1,613,002.28 was spent on consultancy advice. The cost of work undertaken by individual contractors is commercially confidential.

Machine Tool Industry

Mr. William O' Brien: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he last discussed the prospects of continuing investment in the machine tool industry with the leaders of that industry; and what concerns the leaders in that industry expressed about ensuring their competitiveness in the world markets.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Ministers and officials in the DTI have had close and continuing contact with the machine tool industry in recent years. The most important influence on investment is a stable economic climate based on low inflation. Inflation is now at its lowest level for 27 years and the output of the United Kingdom machine tool industry is about 15 per cent. higher than a year ago.

We have also discussed with the industry's trade association, the Machine Tool Technologies Association—MTTA—ways to improve the overall competitiveness of the industry. We are presently working with the MTTA and other associations to produce guidance for small manufacturing firms which will enable them to improve the overall quality of investment. This was an initiative referred to in the White Paper "Competitiveness: Helping Business to Win", Cm 2563.

Manufacturing

Mr. Sainsbury: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what estimate he has made of the effect on manufacturing employment of manufacturing businesses contracting out to other firms, classified as service businesses, activities such as transport, catering and cleaning.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Central Statistical Office has estimated that manufacturing employment might have been up to three quarters of a million higher than recorded in 1989 had manufacturers' purchases of non-industrial services as a proportion of total sales remained at 1973 levels—"Changes in the structure of manufacturing industry 1973–1989 as measured by the annual Census of Production", Economic Trends, No. 462 April 1992.

Steel

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which EC member states increased steel production between 1988 and 1992; and by how much production and employment fell in the United Kingdom steel industry during this period.

Mr. Eggar: Crude steel production in Italy and Spain increased by 4.5 per cent. and 3 per cent. respectively between 1988 and 1992. In the United Kingdom steel industry production fell by 14.5 per cent. and employment fell by 26 per cent. over the same period.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the numbers employed in the steel industries of EC member states in 1975, 1981, 1987 and 1993 with the percentage change in the numbers employed since 1975.

Mr. Eggar: The information requested is in the table.

Employment in the steel industry of EC member states

Country	1975	1981	1987	1993	percentage change 1975–1993
		thousands
Germany	222.0	187.0	133.3	110.3	–50.3

Notes:
a) EC member from 1/1/82.
b) EC member from 1/1/87.
Employment figures are as at end of year.
Steel industry as defined under treaty of Paris, 1951.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what action he proposes to take to assist the British steel industry in view of the nature of the support by other member states and of their industries; and if he will make a statement on the enforcement of articles 4 and 95 of the treaty.

Mr. Eggar: The best way in which the Government can assist the industry is to work for an international market in which the highly efficient United Kingdom steel industry can trade freely and without unfair competition. The Government will continue to press the Commission to enforce the state aid rules rigorously and to take action against any breaches.

Foreign Investment in Europe

Mr. Morgan: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the British share of (a) American investment in Europe in each year since 1964 and (b) all non-European investment in Europe over the same time period.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Table 1 sets out the United Kingdom's share of American investment in Europe since 1964. The remaining information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost. This is because data are not available on a consistent basis for the entire period requested.

From sources readily available within the Department it would require converting data from national currencies to a common currency for each year and obtaining data from "National Statistical Sources".

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on his plans to introduce legislation to implement the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Heseltine: The United kingdom remains committed to the chemical weapons convention and legislation to facilitate its ratification will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and other Government legislative priorities permit.

Electricity

Mr. David Howell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the varying pattern of domestic electricity prices throughout England and Wales; and if he will publish a table giving the information he has received from the electricity distribution companies, as to their plans for price reductions to domestic consumers during the coming year and the part played by additional funds paid in advance before the levying of VAT on electricity, as from April of this year, in enabling electricity authorities to reduce their prices.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Domestic electricity prices are subject to certain price control formulae set by the Director General of Electricity Supply. The price controls are set on a comparable basis for each regional electricity company—REC—but take into account variations such as local conditions and the different customer bases in each region.

The plans for future electricity tariffs are a commercial matter for the public electricity suppliers, although all such suppliers will need to take the price controls into account when setting their tariffs.

CHURCH COMMISSIONERS

Pensions

31. Mr. Jenkin: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what provision the Commissioners make for pensions for those in service of the Church of England.

Mr. Alison: The security of existing clergy pensions is not at issue, as the value of the Commissioners' assets comfortably exceeds the accrued pension liabilities for retired clergy and those currently in active service. Separate funding arrangements are in place to pay the pensions of lay employees of the Church of England.

The Commissioners and the pensions board are discussing with dioceses proposals for funding pension liabilities arising from the future service of clergy on a more sustainable basis involving contributions. This will help secure the Commissioners' continuing ability to help the Church in other ways.

Remunerated Clergy

32. Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what is the number of remunerated clergy who have (a) retired from, (b) resigned from and (c) joined the payroll of the Church of England in the last 12 months.

Mr. Alison: Since 1 January 1994, 364 stipendiary clergy have retired, 440 have resigned and 465 have joined the Commissioners' payroll.

Lambeth Report

34. Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners if all the recommendations contained in the Lambeth report have now been implemented.

Mr. Alison: The implementation of the Lambeth report recommendations was overseen by a steering group of governors appointed by the board of the Commissioners. This will shortly report to the board that all the recommendations either have been implemented or, as in the case of arrangements for the future funding of clergy pensions, are being vigorously pursued.

Assets

35. Mr. Gapes: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what is the current value of the total assets of the Church Commissioners.

Mr. Alison: The Commissioners' assets are revalued once a year. As at 31 December 1993 the total net value of the assets was £2,420 million.

Investments

36. Mr. Win Griffiths: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners what percentage of investments are held in companies which are specifically recognised by investment trusts and others buying and selling stocks and shares as ethically and environmentally acceptable.

Mr. Alison: All our company holdings are subject to our ethical criteria, which are reviewed from time to time.

Investments (Profit)

37. Ms Abbott: To ask the right hon. Member for Selby, as representing the Church Commissioners how much profit the Church Commissioners have made this year from investments.

Mr. Alison: Our estimated income for 1994 is £143 million. The assets are revalued at the end of each year, and therefore it is too early to say what changes in value may have occurred by then.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Sir John Wheeler: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available but I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 25 October 1994, regarding spending on hospitality, Official Report, column 543.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Sir John Wheeler: Ministers representing the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments estimate they will be sending 2,525 Christmas cards at a cost of £2,048 to buy and £498 to post.

The cost in staff time to sign, address and envelope is not available.

A sample copy of the Christmas cards will be placed in the Library when available.

Irish Republic (President's Visit)

Mr. Trimble: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if public funds were involved in the most recent visit of the President of the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland; and which of the bodies inviting her are in receipt of public funds;

(2) when Her Majesty's Government were first informed of the most recent visit of the President of the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland; and when her precise itinerary was disclosed;

(3) if he will list the engagements of the President of the Irish Republic on the occasion of her most recent visit to Northern Ireland, indicating those engagements which were purely private and those which were of a public character;

(4) what was the date of the most recent visit of the President of the Irish Republic to Northern Ireland; and whether it was a public visit or a private visit.

Sir John Wheeler: The President of the Republic of Ireland paid a private working visit to Northern Ireland on 15 and 16 November 1994 where she attended the 1550th anniversary service to mark the establishment of Christianity in Ireland at St. Patrick's Church of Ireland cathedral, Armagh; a conference of European student unions on equality of opportunity in higher education at the Wellington Park hotel, Belfast; visited Hazelwood college, Belfast and a resident at Bethany nursing home, Belfast. All of these visits were in response to private invitations; the church service was also a public act of worship.

Apart from the usual security requirements no public funds were expended on the visit. Hazelwood college is funded by the Department of Education.

Her Majesty's Government were first advised of President Robinson's visit on 25 May 1993 and the final itinerary confirmed on 7 November 1994.

Newcastle Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of Newcastle disease were identified in each year since 1985.

Mr. Ancram: Newcastle disease occurred in Northern Ireland in 1991, when six cases were identified.

Quangos

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland which quangos his Department has abolished since 1979.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 25 November 1994]: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to Dr. Tony Wright by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister on 1 February 1994, Official Report, column 611.

In addition to the information in the publications mentioned in that reply the following non-departmental public bodies have ceased to exist since 1986:

—* combined to become NI Council for the Curriculum, Examination and Assessment.

Summary data for the years 1979 to 1985 are not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sykes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many quangos his Department was responsible for (a) in 1979 and (b) in the latest year for which a number is available.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 25 November 1994]: (a) My right hon. and learned Friend was responsible for a total of 132 non-departmental bodies in 1979 as listed in the "Report on Non-Departmental Public Bodies"—Pliatzky Report Cm 7797, January 1980; and

(b) in 1993 he was responsible for 108 non-departmental public bodies as listed in "Public Bodies 1993".

Education Costs

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish details of the annual costs to (a) the Department for Education and (b) education and library boards in Northern Ireland related to the transfer procedure in each of the last three years for which records are available.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

	1991–92	1992–93	1993–94
Department of Education	143	156	246
Education and Library Boards[1]	454	485	508

[1] Excludes teacher substitution for the completion of transfer report forms, which cannot be identified separately but includes the cost of appeals regarding placements in grammar and non-grammar secondary schools.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Hong Kong

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been received alleging the failure of the Hong Kong administration effectively to enforce national wildlife laws and implement the convention on international trade in endangered species, and what has been the response.

Mr. Goodlad: In the past year we have received representations from members of the public responding to non-governmental organisations letter campaigns, and representations from the following NGOs:

Naturewatch—Rhino horn and ivory sales

World Wide Fund for Nature—Sale of rhino, tiger and bear parts

Traffic international—Sale of rhino and tiger products

Environmental Investigation Agency—Sale of bear products and rhino horn.

The EIA met with the Governor of Hong Kong in London to ask for a dedicated wildlife enforcement unit to be created. It wrote to the Governor in October, again requesting the setting up of a specialised unit. We received a similar request in two early-day motions, 22 and 59.

Hong Kong set up an endangered species protection liaison group in November 1993 to co-ordinate and implement actions in enforcing national wildlife laws and implementing CITES. The group has access to the resources and expertise of all enforcement and policy agencies, including under cover capability. Should circumstances change, or if any evidence of wholesale trafficking should come to light, Hong Kong will look again at the idea of whether a specialised unit should be set up, and whether it would do the job better.

The Hong Kong Government are keen to work with NGOs, and is currently liaising with Traffic on a study into Hong Kong's position in the Asian medicine trade. The Hong Kong Government take seriously representations alleging CITES abuses, and follow up evidence that is supplied.

Serbia (Sanctions)

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is Her Majesty's Government's policy regarding financial and practical assistance to Romania, Hungary and Bulgaria in consequence of sanctions against Serbia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The effect of sanctions against former Yugoslavia on neighbouring states is difficult to quantify. Assistance is best directed at helping their economies adapt to their changed circumstances. In our view, the international financial institutions, especially the International Monetary Fund, are best placed to assess the damage caused by sanctions and take account of it in their programmes. Romania and Bulgaria have active programmes with the IMF. We also support other multilateral and bilateral efforts, including those of the United Kingdom's know-how fund, aimed at assisting the change to a market economy.

Iraq (Sanctions)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has about the impact upon the Kurdish areas of the current policy of sanctions upon Iraq.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We recognise that United Nations sanctions have had a debilitating effect on Iraq. The situation is particularly severe in the Kurdish occupied areas in the north and the southern marshes where the Iraqi regime has also imposed internal economic embargoes. Nevertheless, the Kurdish leadership supports the need to maintain sanctions until Iraq is in compliance with all relevant resolutions. Given the internal embargo, the north is a particular focus for the international aid effort.

Western European Union (Danube Mission)

Sir Russell Johnston: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many personnel are assigned to the WEU mission on the Danube from each WEU member state, distinguishing between those at Mohacs, Calafat and Ruse.

Mr. Goodlad: The latest available statistics relate to the situation on 1 October. On this date, there were 34 German, seven Dutch, five Luxembourg, five Italian and two British officers in the Mohacs area; 74 Italian, six German, 20 French, 13 Dutch and three Spanish officers in Calafat; and 47 Spanish and 32 German officers in Ruse.

Bulgaria

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if it is the Government's policy to assist Bulgaria with measures to help ensure higher safety standards for Bulgarian nuclear energy installations; and what plans he has to provide Bulgaria with new forms of financial assistance to achieve this.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Government support international efforts to improve nuclear safety in Bulgaria, through both the European Union and the nuclear safety account managed by the European Bank for Reconstruction and Development. Projects for Kozloduy nuclear power plant total some 30 mecu and 24 mecu respectively. The United Kingdom has also provided some bilateral assistance to Bulgaria in the form of emergency preparedness, studies and training. No new forms of financial assistance in this area are currently being considered.

Entry Clearance Applications

Mr. Nigel Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will ensure that copies of the list of posts designated to accept entry clearance applications are placed in the Libraries of the House each time the list is revised.

Mr. Baldry: Yes. Amended lists are presented to the Libraries of both Houses following each revision, which will normally be made twice yearly. I have arranged for the latest lists to be placed in the Libraries today. Members of the public may obtain copies from the migration and visa department of the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

Government Hospitality Fund

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22

November, Official Report, column 109, if he will list the operational budget of the Government hospitality fund and staff levels for each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Goodlad: The operational budget of the Government hospitality fund and staff levels for each of the last 10 years are as follows:

Year	Budget	Staff levels
1984–85	730,000	26
1985–86	844,000	26
1986–87	945,000	26
1987–88	808,000	26
1988–89	908,000	26
1989–90	1,217,000	26
1990–91	1,099,000	26
1991–92	1,117.000	26
1992–93	1,152,000	26
1993–94	1,337,000	26

The cost of visits in 1993–94 rose as a consequence of visits made by Ministers from the new nations emerging in the former Soviet Union.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 110, if he will provide a departmental breakdown of (a) hospitality and (b) visits costs in each of the last five years.

Mr. Goodlad: The Government hospitality fund provides official hospitality on behalf of Her Majesty's Government, not on behalf of Departments. All invitations for hospitality and visits are issued in the name of Her Majesty's Government.

Arms Sales, Indonesia

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the total value of arms sales to Indonesia since 1979 and the amount for each individual year.

Mr. Freeman: I have been asked to reply.

It is not Government policy to reveal details of the value of arms exports to individual countries. Details of the value of exports by geographic region are contained in table 1.11 of United Kingdom defence statistics. A copy of the 1994 edition has been placed in the House Library. In addition, the United Kingdom's annual return to the UN arms register provides information on transfers of equipment within certain broad categories.

Death Penalty

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries of the British Commonwealth still retain the death penalty; and what was the number of people in each country under sentence of death on 16 November.

Mr. Baldry: The information is as follows:

Commonwealth Country	Numbers	Comments

Commonwealth Institute

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the formal relationship between the Commonwealth Institute and the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland.

Mr. Baldry: The Imperial Institute Act 1925 and the Commonwealth Institute Act 1958, as amended, established and deal with one statutory organisation, the Commonwealth Institute. The Commonwealth Institute, Scotland was constituted by the board of governors of the Commonwealth Institute. It has no separate legal status or personality. The chairman of the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland is a member of the board of governors of the Commonwealth Institute.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the proposals that have been made to him by the Commonwealth Institute for the continuation of the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland.

Mr. Baldry: The chairman of the institute, Scotland is in close contact with the board of governors of the Commonwealth Institute on which assessors, appointed by my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary, represent Government Departments, and is pursuing solutions for the future. He is also exploring the possibilities of maintaining the Scottish Institute's programmes in collaboration with other organisations in Scotland.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the continued funding of the Commonwealth Institute by his Department and the conditions for that funding.

Mr. Baldry: My noble Friend the Baroness Chalker of Wallasey informed the then acting chairman of the Commonwealth Institute on 12 July 1994 that the Government are prepared to make available £1 million for the financial year 1996–97, £800,000 for 1997–98 and £600,000 for 1998—99. The offer is conditional upon the institute submitting by 16 July 1995 a business plan and a building plan for assessment by independent consultants, and for approval by Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who owns the premises used by the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland; and what contribution is made by public funds to the building and the provision of services by the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland.

Mr. Baldry: The trustees of the Commonwealth Institute are empowered to hold the assets of the institute. The Commonwealth Institute, Scotland receives a grant in aid of £215,000 per annum.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received about the continued operation of the work of the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland.

Mr. Baldry: On 28 April 1994, the chairman of the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland requested that the Government provide an annual core grant of £116,000 after March 1996. The chairman has submitted a plan to the board of governors of the institute for keeping the body in being after 1996.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions or contacts have taken place between his Department and the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland about its continued existence and funding by his Department.

Mr. Baldry: My noble Friend the Baroness Chalker of Wallasey informed the chairman of the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland on 12 July 1994 that the Government could not meet his request for an annual grant after 1996. However, a grant of £24 million would be made available to the parent body in London for the period 1996 to 1999 to assist the relaunch plan. There would be no objection from Government to the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland requesting the board of the institute in London to make available post-1996 a proportion of its funding.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what policy options he is currently considering about the future of the Commonwealth Institute in Scotland.

Mr. Baldry: None. The chairman of the Commonwealth Institute, Scotland is currently exploring the possibilities of maintaining the Scottish Institute's programmes in collaboration with other organisations in Scotland.

Somalia

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the United Nations Security Council delegation that went to Somalia visited Somaliland; what was the outcome of the visit; what is the current UN attitude to the support of peace development efforts in Somaliland; and what it has done practically to support such efforts.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The United Nations mission confined its visit to Mogadishu. It concluded that the lack of progress on political reconciliation and the security environment meant that the UN could no longer achieve its objectives and that the UN force should be withdrawn. This view was endorsed by the Security Council in its resolution No. 954. This also makes it clear that the UN is ready to play a role in reconciliation efforts in Somalia after UNOSOM's withdrawal, if the Somalis wish.

Turkey

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken to satisfy himself that arms supplied to Turkey by the United Kingdom and other NATO states are not being used for the violation or suppression of human rights and fundamental freedoms; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Proposed United Kingdom arms sales to Turkey, as to other countries, are considered on a case-by-case basis and are subject to stringent licensing procedures. Before a licence is granted, a wide range of factors are taken into account—including an assessment of the recipient country's human rights record and of the use to which the equipment will be put. We do not grant licences for the sale of equipment which we believe is likely to be used for internal repression.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Government of Turkey regarding bans on British parliamentarians visiting or travelling through that country.

Mr. Goodlad: Turkey has imposed no general ban on British parliamentarians visiting or travelling through that country. We have expressed our concern to the Turkish Government at the ban imposed recently on the noble Lord, the Lord Avebury.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he made to the Turkish Government regarding abuse of human rights, destruction of villages and forced displacement of people from south-eastern Turkey during his visit to Istanbul on 14 October.

Mr. Goodlad: During my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary's visit to Istanbul on 14 October he raised human rights issues with the Turkish Prime Minister. He also discussed the situation in the south-east of Turkey with the Turkish Foreign Minister. The Turkish Government are well aware of the importance we attach to their improving their human rights record.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will urge Dr. Francis Deng, the United Nations rapporteur on internally displaced persons, to conduct a survey of the position in south-east Turkey; and what assessment he has made of the adequacy of resources for the task.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: UN human rights investigators draw up their own programmes of visits in the light of their mandates and priorities. It would be inappropriate for any country to attempt to influence the work of such investigators, including Mr. Deng. We are not aware of any immediate plans by Mr. Deng for a visit to Turkey.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if arms being supplied Turkey by the United Kingdom and other NATO member states are of a nature which could be used against Greece.

Mr. Goodlad: Yes, the same would be true of weapons sold to any other NATO member state.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the conformity of arms sales to Turkey by the United Kingdom and other Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe states with the CSCE principles governing conventional arms transfers of November 1993; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Our policy on arms sales to Turkey, as to other countries, is in accordance with the CSCE principles governing conventional arms transfer of November 1993; with the guidelines on conventional arms transfer agreed by the five permanent members of the UN Security Council; and with the European Union common criteria for arms exports.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the extent of the European arms embargo against Sudan; what assessment he has made of compliance with them; and what measures are being taken to bring (a) South Africa and (b) other countries into the embargo.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The European Union arms embargo agreed on 8 March this year covers arms, munitions and military equipment. As far as we know, it is being fully complied with. The arms embargo covers only European Union member states.

Al Yamamah Contract

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has received from Sir Colin Southgate, chairman of Thorn/EMI, on commissions paid on the Al Yamamah arms contract with Saudi Arabia, and which other companies he is aware of where commissions were paid in regard to this and other contracts; and to whom.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received no such information.

Human Dimension Review

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish details of any proposals put by Her Majesty's Government to the Conference on Security and Co-operation in Europe's human dimension review meeting in Budapest.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The proposals tabled at the CSCE review conference have not been published because negotiations on them will not be completed before the summit. Some delegations and non-governmental organisations have, however, made available texts of their interventions during the conference. The conclusions of the four working groups, which cover all aspects of the CSCE's work, including the human dimension, will be incorporated into the final document to be approved by Heads of State and Government on 5 and 6 December.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Haverigg Prison

Dr. John Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) on what grounds catering problems at Haverigg were explained in a "Prison Service News" release as a legacy of its origin as an RAF camp;

(2) what steps have been taken to improve the standard of food and hygiene in Haverigg prison following Judge Tumim's inspection report on 13 July;

(3) what steps he has taken to reduce the level of drug trafficking to Haverigg prison, as reported in Judge Tumim's report on 13 July;

(4) what further drugs offences have occurred at Haverigg prison since July; and what further precautions will be taken to address this problem.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. John Cunningham, dated 28 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about Haverigg prison.

Haverigg occupies a former Royal Air Force site. The dining rooms criticised in HM Chief Inspector of Prisons report were built by the Royal Air Force approximately 54 years ago. They are particularly difficult to clean, and new cleaning schedules for the kitchen and dining rooms have been drawn up and implemented.

The kitchen is being fully refurbished. A complete refit was begun this summer and is to be completed next month. This has required the provision of a temporary mobile kitchen for food preparation. A new catering manager and catering staff have resulted in higher standards.

Since July there have been 38 adjudications on prisoners charged with unauthorised possession of controlled drugs or articles containing traces of such drugs. Two visitors were arrested for the possession of such drugs. One was cautioned by the police and the other convicted by magistrates.

Drug trafficking is being tackled by increasing searching of visitors, use of security information and searching of the prisoner population, grounds and buildings. Closed circuit television will be introduced in the visits room to deter trafficking there.

We also have a programme of drug education and training for prisoners on reception, which emphasises the dangers of drug abuse and is followed by counselling, group work and introduction to a drug rehabilitation course. This is being developed using psychology staff and local volunteer groups.

Probation Officers

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to have reached a conclusion on the report on the examination of the recruitment and qualifying training of probation officers and the number of sponsored places for such training in 1995; and when he will publish the report.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The report is under active consideration and a statement will be made shortly.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Pendry : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) if he will include the group of substances known as anabolic agents with particular reference to beta-2-agonists, salbutoamol, clenbuterol, salmeterol and terbutaline, in his proposals to combat the abuse of anabolic steroids;

(2) if he plans to extend his recent proposals to combat the misuse of anabolic steroids to cover growth hormone, human chorionic gonadotrophin, corticotrophin and erythropoeitin.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Following the announcement on 2 November by my right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary's decision to impose further controls on anabolic steroids and other similar drugs, he has asked the Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs to consider and advise on exactly which substances should be brought within the controls of the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. I understand that growth hormones and beta-2-agonists will be among the substances considered by the advisory council.

Women Prisoners

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many women either had children when they were sentenced to prison or have given birth in prison in the past three years; and if he will list the crimes for which they were sentenced.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Ms Lynne Jones, dated 28 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of women who either have children when they are sentenced to prison or who have given birth in prison in the past three years and the crimes for which they were sentenced.

Information on the numbers of mothers in custody is not routinely collected by the Prison Service. Instead such information has been collected by conducting surveys of female prisoners, concentrating in particular on those who are mothers. Such censuses were carried out in 1982, 1986 and 1989. I enclose the results of the 1989 census, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

The Home Office Research and Planning Unit has recently commissioned a census of mothers in prison. This was launched earlier this month, following a successful pilot study, and will cover all women in prison, including those on remand. The results are expected in the New Year.

Our records show the number of women temporarily removed to outside hospital for delivery and returning to establishments afterwards. The figures for the past three years are:

1991–92	56
1992–93	29

There is no record of births having taken place in establishments in recent years.

I regret that the information on the crimes for which the mothers were sentenced is not available.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning progress towards agreement on the European Union's data protection directive; which are the areas where the United Kingdom Government still have major concerns; and which parts of the directive he expects to vote against at the meeting of the Council of Ministers in December.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The United Kingdom has made clear that it disagrees both with the principle of a directive on data protection, and with the specific proposals put forward by the Commission—which are in many respects over-prescriptive, unnecessarily burdensome and very costly, especially in relation to manually held data. The Government will decide, in the light of all the relevant considerations, what stance to adopt when the directive comes up for discussion in the Council of Ministers.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what plans he has to reverse the United Kingdom's policy towards the derogations entered against the first sentence of paragraph 2.4, the second sentence of paragraph 3.1 and from paragraph 3.3 of Council of Europe recommendation R(85)20; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) European Union's proposals for a data protection directive and (b) decisions of the data protection tribunal for these derogations;

(2) what plans he has to reverse the United Kingdom's policy towards the derogations entered against principles 6.2 and 6.3 and paragraph 2 of Council of Europe recommendation R(91)10; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) European Union's proposals for a data protection directive and (b) decisions of the data protection tribunal for these derogations;

(3) what plans he has to reverse the United Kingdom's policy towards the derogations entered against principals 2.2 and 2.4 of Council of Europe recommendation R(87)15; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) European Union's proposals for a data protection directive and (b) decisions of the data protection tribunal for these derogations;

(4) what plans he has to reverse the United Kingdom's policy towards the derogations entered against the second sub-paragraph of paragraph 1.2, the second sentence of paragraph 3.3 and from paragraph 5 of Council of Europe recommendation R(86)1; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) European Union's proposals for a data protection directive and (b) decisions of the data protection tribunal for these derogations;

(5) what plans he has to reverse the United Kingdom's policy towards the derogation entered against Council of Europe recommendation R(83)10; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) European Union's proposals for a data protection directive and (b) decisions of the data protection tribunal for this derogation;

(6) what plans he has to reverse the United Kingdom's policy towards the derogations entered against paragraphs 3.3, 3.4, 5.16 and 7.1 of Council of Europe recommendation R(90)19; and what assessment he has made of the implications of the (a) European Union's proposals for a data protection directive and (b) decisions of the data protection tribunal for these derogations.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: There are no current plans to amend any of the United Kingdom's derogations in regard to the Council of Europe recommendations mentioned.

It would be premature to consider the implications of the proposed data protection directive for these derogations, until the directive has been adopted. The implications—if any—of the jurisprudence of the data protection tribunal for the derogations remain under consideration.

Terrorists

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women convicted of terrorist offences within the United Kingdom are at present serving a prison sentence in England and Wales.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 28 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of men and women at present serving sentences in England and Wales for terrorist offences.

Readily available information on the number of prisoners serving sentences in England and Wales whose offences were related to terrorism is limited to those classified as category A.

On 24 November 1994 there were 45 men and no women.

Criminal Injuries Compensation Scheme

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review the system of payments available via the criminal injuries compensation scheme to make better provisions for victims of crime and their families.

Mr. Maclean: The Government reviewed the scheme prior to the introduction earlier this year of the new tariff scheme. The tariff scheme is simpler for claimants to understand, easier to administer and victims will get their money more quickly. It will also enable us to predict and control costs more readily, while at the same time continuing to provide one of the most generous compensation schemes anywhere. The workings of the tariff scheme will be closely monitored and we will make any refinements that prove necessary in the light of experience.

Crime Victims (Court Cases)

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to amend the law to impose a duty on the prosecuting authorities to advise victims of crime and their families about the progress of criminal proceedings in which they were involved including advanced notification of hearing dates, adjournments and grants of bail to the defendant.

Mr. Maclean: The prosecuting authorities are well aware of the importance of keeping victims advised of case progress, and every effort is being made to ensure that this should be done to the fullest extent practicable. I am not persuaded that legislation is required to achieve this.

Special Constables

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department in what circumstances special constables or their dependants are eligible to make claims for criminal injuries compensation if a special constable is killed or injured on duty; how many such compensation claims have been submitted in each of the last three years, to date; how many were (a) accepted and (b) rejected; and what was the amount of compensation paid in each case.

Mr. Maclean: Special constables are eligible to apply for compensation under the criminal injuries compensation scheme in the same way as any other blameless victim of a crime of violence in Great Britain. In cases of death their dependants are similarly eligible to apply. All applications are considered under the same rules.

The Criminal Injuries Compensation Board does not collate centrally information about claims made by special constables, or other occupational groups.

Common Visa List

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department which countries are proposed by the European Commission for inclusion on the common visa list.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The following:

Talacre Beach, Clwyd

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now agree the draft byelaw proposed for Talacre beach, Clwyd by Delyn borough council.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Home Office officials wrote to the council on 25 November giving provisional approval to the byelaws.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Politically Sensitive Implications

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General (1) from what sources cases with politically sensitive implications are referred to him;

(2) what procedure he adopts when dealing with cases with politically sensitive implications;

(3) what have been the sources encouraging him to take action against (a) anti-road protesters, (b) arms to Iraq cases and (c) whistleblowers against Government activity; and how he has analysed these requests before making his decision.

The Attorney-General: Cases may be drawn to my attention by a variety of sources but cases of the type described by the hon. Member would most probably be referred to me by a prosecuting authority.

Criminal proceedings in all cases including those described by the hon. Member would be initiated by the relevant prosecuting authority and not by me.

The proper approach to any such case was described to the House on 28 January 1951, Official Report, column 683 by the then Attorney-General, who set out the principles which have been consistently followed by successive Attorneys-General of either party. I have supplied a copy of the relevant text to the hon. Member.

Extradition

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General if it is the practice of his Department to indicate to the Irish Attorney-General if extradition requests are urgent or important or both.

The Attorney-General: If there are specific time constraints, for example if the person whose return is sought is liable to be released from custody in the Republic of Ireland, it is the practice to draw attention to them.

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Attorney-General on what date officials in his Department advised the Irish Attorney-General that it was expected that there would be a voluntary return to Northern Ireland by Brendan Smyth and that as a consequence it was not therefore necessary to proceed with the extradition request.

The Attorney-General: Officials of my Department informed the Irish Attorney-General's office on 6 December 1993 that there was a prospect of Brendan Smyth returning voluntarily to Northern Ireland.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fishing

Mr. Gill: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if Department of Trade and Industry surveys on British-registered fishing vessels have been carried out in Spanish ports.

Mr. Norris: I have been asked to reply.

Yes. The majority of surveys under the Fishing Vessels (Safety Provisions) Rules 1975 are undertaken in United Kingdom ports but some are carried out elsewhere, including Spain.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. Waldegrave: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. Such costs are included in the Ministry's expenditure on official hospitality, figures for which were given on 25 October, Official Report, column 548.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Waldegrave: Approximately 550 official Christmas cards will be sent by MAFF Ministers in 1994. Three designs have been chosen from the Charity

Christmas Card Council catalogue, at a cost of £252. No estimate is available of the staff and postage costs involved. Samples of the cards have been placed in the Library.

Bovine Immunodeficiency Virus

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all blood samples from the herd of Linda and Tim Blything of Cheshire were tested for BIV at the Animal Health Institute; and to what extent tests for BIV on the herd were regarded as abnormal.

Mrs. Browning: We do not divulge information on specific cases on the grounds of confidentiality unless the information has already been put into the public domain by the parties concerned. In this instance, we can confirm that blood samples from the herd of Mr. and Mrs. Blything have been examined at the Institute of Animal Health and the results of the serological examinations would suggest that infection by bovine immunodeficiency-like virus—BIV—is widespread in the herd.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Waldegrave: My Department employs one special adviser.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Industry

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with European Commission about alleged illegal national financial support to the pig industry; if EC funding is available to national Governments for schemes to help their pig industry; and what action he proposes taking to assist United Kingdom pig producers.

Mr. Jack: We follow up all evidence of illegal state aids in other member states with the European Commission. Only in the case of France have we established the existence of illegal aid in the pigmeat sector. After a great deal of pressure from us the Commission announced on 27 July that parts of a package of French state aids for pig farmers were illegal. Further proceedings have now begun against French Government guarantees for loans through the Stabiporc scheme. The Commission has sought comments from member states and other interested parties; we will be submitting a robust response and will keep up the pressure on the Commission to ensure that action is taken.

The Government are committed to a successful pig industry and have provided support by releasing feed wheat from intervention stocks, funding research and development in the pig sector, giving financial assistance to collaborative marketing projects and promoting improvements in key production areas through the publication of booklets, ADAS workshops and promotions in the trade press.

Forestry

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many and which local authorities have responded to the consultation paper "Out Forests, the Way Ahead"; and how many and which local authorities have expressed reservations about the proposal to continue with the disposal of woodland and the loss of public access in these woodlands.

Mr. Jack: Thirteen local authorities in England have responded; nine have expressed reservations about the proposals securing public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission as follows:

Cheshire County Council
East Hampshire District Council
Exeter City Council[1]
Forest of Dean District Council[1]
Hampshire County Council
Herefordshire and Worcestershire County Council[1]
Leicestershire County Council[1]
New Forest District Council[1]
Northamptonshire County Council[1]
Shropshire County Council[1]
Staffordshire County Council[1]
Test Valley Borough Council
Winchester City Council[1]

[1]Councils which have expressed reservations

Sheep Annual Premiums

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many sheep annual premiums have been made to date; and what is the total value of such payments.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 November 1994]: By 18 November, first and second advance payments had been made on a total of £38,385 claims in England, representing a value of £101,920,444.

Lobbying Companies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the guidelines issued by his Department to regulate relationships with lobbying companies.

Mr. Waldegrave [holding answer 24 November 1994]: No guidelines are issued specifically about relations with lobbying companies. The conduct of Ministers in this respect is governed by the guidance in "Questions of Procedure for Ministers". The departmental staff manual incorporates the general principles of conduct that require civil servants not to misuse information which they acquire in the course of their duties; not to make use of their official position to further their private interests or those of others; and not to receive gifts, hospitality or benefits of any kind from a third party, which might be seen to compromise their personal judgment or integrity.

EMPLOYMENT

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Miss Widdecombe: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. Such costs are covered by the entertainment expenditure for this Department which is published in the annual report, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Training

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people completed their training under (1) the training for work scheme and (2) youth training broken down by gender both regionally and nationally; how many successfully found employment on (a) immediate completion of their training, (b) up to three months after completion of training and (c) up to six months after completion of training; and how many were without work one year after completion, for each year since inception of both schemes.

Mr. Paice: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Vacancies

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what are the current numbers and categories of employment vacancies.

Mr. Oppenheim: In October 1994 there were 194,981 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres, the highest number since June 1990. Further details of these vacancies, including occupational classification, is available from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Youth Training

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the numbers of young people who were registered for youth training, broken down both regionally and nationally and by gender, who are (a) currently without offer of a place, (b) ineligible for income support or (c) receiving special hardship allowance in each year since 1979.

Mr. Paice: The information requested is not available. However, the number of young people covered by the youth training guarantee who have been registered with careers services in England for eight or more weeks is provided in the following table:

Region[1]	October 1993[2]	October 1994[3]
South East	670	48
London	491	171
Eastern	538	113
South West	208	130
West Midlands	183	65
East Midlands	290	56
Yorkshire and Humberside	146	174
Merseyside	271	27
North West	337	114
North East	198	162
England	3,332	1,060

Notes:
[1] Employment Department training, enterprise and education directorate regions.
[2] 14 October 1993.
[3] 31 October 1994.

All claims for income support from 16 and 17-year-olds are automatically considered under the severe hardship provision unless entitlement under the normal provisions already exist. So far this year, around 86 per cent. of claims under severe hardship have been successful.

Departmental Staff

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the minimum salary for a 16-year-old employed by his Department in London; and how many are so employed.

Miss Widdecombe: The minimum salary for a 16-year-old employed by the Employment Department group in London is £4,995 for non-industrial staff. There is currently one 16-year-old employed by the ED group in London.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Cairo Waste Water Project

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was entailed in (a) the contract 18: Cairo waste water project awarded to Biwater International and (b) the supervision of contract 18: Cairo waste water project awarded to Taylor Binnie and Partners.

Mr. Baldry: Contract 18 provides the Egyptian General Organisation for Sanitary Drainage with services for:

- preparation of the systems and procedures needed to run the new East Bank pumping stations, including the provision of information to management;
- operating and maintaining the stations in accordance with these systems and procedures;
- training GOSD personnel, who will take over from the contractor and run the stations subsequently; and
- technical support following handover to GOSD.

Taylor Binnie is providing detailed technical supervision and administration. Its supervisory role includes ensuring that the systems and procedures to be developed are compatible with GOSD's wider long-term institutional needs.

Overseas Projects

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what total number of man days were expended in the financial year 1993–94 on projects for (a) curriculum reform in-service training by the British Council and CPL, (b) Uganda Revenue Authority: capacity building by Coopers and Lybrand, (c) Bangladesh Power Development Board action plan for performance improvement by Coopers and Lybrand Deloitte, (d) Qa Disi basin water study by Haiste International Ltd., (e) agricultural support services project by Hunting Technical Services and (f) mass privatisation adviser by Warburg and Co. Ltd.

Mr. Baldry: Financing arrangements with contractors vary from project to project and it is not always possible to be precise about the number of man days expended under each contract.

(a) Approximately 540 man days.

(b) Four staff were employed full time throughout 1993–94 and they were joined by two others who worked from May 1993 to the end of the financial year.

(c) Approximately 45 man days.

(e) Approximately 1,949 man days.

(f) This is a fixed fee contract against which there are no pre-set manpower inputs.

Privatisation Advisers

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs for what countries Schroders and Warburg and Co. Ltd. was employed as mass privatisation advisers (a) in the financial year 1992–93 and (b) since.

Mr. Baldry: J. Henry Schroder Wagg and Co. Ltd.—Schroders—was employed to give advice to the Government of Hungary on mass privatisation from February until April 1992. As a member of a consortium led by Ernst and Young Management Consultants, it gave advice on various aspects of mass privatisation to the Czech and Slovak Republics between September 1992 and September 1993.

S. G. Warburg and Co. Ltd. is contracted to give advice to Poland on mass privatisation from 1 November 1992 until 31 December 1994.

Crown Agents

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs to which country the Crown Agents provided technical co-operation support for an International Bank for Reconstruction and Development rehabilitation loan in the financial year 1992–93.

Mr. Baldry: In 1992–93, the Crown Agents provided technical co-operation and training support to Government procurement agents within the Russian Federation to assist them in the implementation of a World bank rehabilitation loan.

Overseas Travel

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the total bill for Overseas Development Administration staff travel in the financial year 1993–94.

Mr. Baldry: The cost of official travel on administering the aid programme by staff of the Overseas Development Administration was £1.4 million in 1993–94. That includes travel by spouses and children of staff serving in overseas locations.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proportion of Overseas Development Administration spending on scheduled airline flights during the financial year 1993–94 consisted of (a) economy class, (b) business-club class and (c) first-class travel.

Mr. Baldry: The proportions are approximately (a) 23 per cent. economy class, (b) 76 per cent. business-club class and (c) 1 per cent. first class.

Energy Efficiency

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what were the project specifications for (a) the energy efficiency in buildings project awarded to the Building Research Establishment, (b) the energy efficiency training project awarded to March Consultancy and (c) the short-term energy requirement study awarded to Lord Marshall of Goring for the financial year 1992–93.

Mr. Baldry: Copies of the terms of reference/scope of work for the three contracts referred to have been placed in the Library of the House.

Multilateral Development Banks

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to join and support the task force on the multilateral development banks, instigated in May to review the activities of the World bank and the regional development banks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: A senior ODA official will be a member of the task force, which is scheduled to start work in December.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to insist that the World bank cancels debts incurred by the Governments of poor countries on loans granted in contravention of the bank's own guidelines.

Mr. Baldry: We will continue to work with other shareholders to ensure that the bank has appropriate systems and procedures in place and abides by its operational guidelines.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to ensure that the World bank adopts policies compatible with the recommendations of the all-party parliamentary group on overseas development on sub-Saharan multilateral debt; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: The recommendations in the all-party parliamentary group's report on Africa's multilateral debt are being given careful consideration.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if he will encourage Governments borrowing from the World bank and the International Monetary Fund to release loan documents at the end of each cycle of 18 months to two years;

(2) if he will encourage countries borrowing from the International Monetary Fund and the World bank to release policy framework papers setting out macro-economic and structural policy measures and social and environmental information.

Mr. Baldry: The bank and the fund encourage borrowers to make as much information as possible available locally about development priorities and programmes, including policy framework papers and project-related documentation.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the impact of recent moves to increase transparency and accountability in the operations of the World bank; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We welcomed the presumption in favour of disclosure, on which the bank's board of directors decided in August 1993, and the resulting significant expansion in the range of information about the bank's policies and operations which is now publicly available. The revised disclosure of information policy is scheduled for review after one year of implementation; and we shall consider carefully with other shareholders whether improvements are needed.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement outlining the Government's response to the German proposals to increase accountability of the World bank.

Mr. Baldry: We have not been informed of any German initiative in this area.

Cameroon

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the World bank's review of the Douala infrastructure project in Cameroon.

Mr. Baldry: Bank staff have informed us that, following a recent review by the Government of Cameroon and the bank of the second urban project, approved in 1988, it has been decided to close the loan and cancel the balance of the Douala infrastructure component, implementation of which had been disrupted following civil unrest in 1991. A new project, which will include follow-on work on Douala infrastructure, is under preparation. This will be on concessional IDA terms, whereas the 1988 loan was on International Bank for Reconstruction and Development terms.

Africa

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to implement the recommendations of the all-party group on overseas development in its recent report on Africa's multilateral debt on the introduction of an official channel of communication between the international financial institutions and Parliament.

Mr. Baldry: International financial institutions are intergovernmental bodies owned by their member Governments. Appropriate channels of communication are already in place between the institutions and HMG, who are accountable to Parliament.

Yemen

Mr. Hicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to restore overseas aid to the Republic of Yemen, with particular reference to the project to support Sana'a university establishing a postgraduate course in English language studies; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The case for restoring aid to the republic of Yemen, including the project to support the Sana'a university English language programme, is currently under review.

Climate Change (Africa)

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what plans he has to continue funding for the Overseas Development Administration studies regarding the impact of limiting carbon dioxide emissions in Zimbabwe; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what plans he has to continue funding of the Overseas Development Administration studies of the impact of climatic change in Ghana and Kenya; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The ODA financed studies were completed in 1992. We have no plans to pursue the issue bilaterally, but the replenished and restructured global environment facility, to which the United Kingdom has committed £89.5 million, is available to assist developing country parties to the climate change convention with their national strategies, plans and programmes.

Uganda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress is being made at the World bank and IMF in reducing Uganda's debt to these bodies; and what is Uganda's current level of debt to those bodies.

Mr. Baldry: [holding answer 25 November 1994]: Uganda has outstanding debts of about $391 million to the IMF and $1.25 billion to the World bank. Work is under way in both institutions in response to the proposals on multilateral debt outlined by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his answer on 19 October to the hon. Member for Blaenau Gwent (Mr. Smith), Official Report, columns 272–74.

Ukraine

Ms Quin: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last discussed the question of balance of payments support for the Ukraine with his EU counterparts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry [holding answer 25 November 1994]: My right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary last discussed the issue of balance of payments support for Ukraine with his EU counterparts on 4 October. My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer discussed Ukraine with his EU colleagues on 7 November. The subject is also expected to be discussed at meetings of EU Foreign and Finance Ministers in the next two weeks.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. Dewar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will estimate the number of claimants of invalidity benefit who are (a) terminally ill or (b) in receipt of the highest rate care component of disability living allowance.

Mr. Hague: Information in the form requested is not available. We estimate that around 25,000 people of working age become terminally ill each year although not all will qualify for incapacity benefits, some will be in receipt of statutory sick pay and others will not satisfy the contribution conditions. We estimate that up to 10,000 people who are receiving the higher rate care component of disability living allowance may claim incapacity benefits each year.

Company Pension Schemes

Mr. Pike: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what representations he has received in the last 12 months regarding additional voluntary contributions in relation to company pension schemes; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what action he proposes to take to change the protection to pensions secured by; additional voluntary contributions and if he will make a statement;

(3) what reports or representations he has received regarding the failure of the Bellings and Co. Ltd. retirement benefit plan; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The proposed changes to the legislation will increase protection for all members of occupational pension schemes by introducing safeguards, including the proposed minimum solvency requirement which should ensure that the value of all accrued rights is protected in the event of a scheme winding up, including the value of additional voluntary contributions. This Department has received a small number of letters about AVCs in the last year and a small number of representations about the Belling pension scheme.

Data Cross-matching

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will place in the Library a copy of his advice, which related to the need for London boroughs to protect claimants from false accusations based on inaccurate data, resulting from his intentions to cross-match council tax and housing benefits personal data with personal data held by his Department.

Mr. Arbuthnot: No written advice has been issued but the Department has held a number of meetings with representatives from the participating London boroughs to discuss the pilot. The cross-matching of data will identify inconsistencies which warrant further consideration. The data sources will be thoroughly checked to confirm any discrepancy prior to any investigation taking place.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he wrote to local authority associations concerning his intentions to cross-match council tax and housing benefits personal data with personal data held by his Department; when copies of this correspondence were sent to the Data Protection Registrar; when he alerted the registrar to the intended data matching exercise in London; and if he will outline the steps which have been taken to improve communications with the registrar's office.

Mr. Arbuthnot: Formal consultations with the local authority associations began on 14 June 1994. Copies of the correspondence were not sent to the data protection registrar. The registrar was informed of the Department's proposals for the pilot exercise at a meeting early in June 1994. We contact the registrar's office whenever necessary.

Benefits

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of administering benefits to the unemployed in cash terms and expressed as a percentage of benefit expenditure in each year since 1979.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the table. The proportion of the administrative cost of income support, housing benefit, council tax benefit, social fund loans, and other benefits attributable to the unemployed is not available.

Administrative cost of unemployment benefit

1979–80	74	11.3
1981–82	142	8.3
1982–83	132	8.8
1983–84	132	8.8
1984–85	133	8.4
1985–86	160	10.1
1986–87	179	10.3
1987–88	166	11.3
1988–89	172	15.5
1989–90	176	24.0
1990–91	182	20.9
1991–92	322	20.1
1992–93	269	15.3
1993–94[1]	—	—

Information Technology

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what was the total cost of information technology, computing systems and equipment in his Departments and its agencies in each of the last three years, distinguishing between (a) capital and equipment, (b) in-house provision services and (c) contracted services and consultancy.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The information is in the table. The figures are on a commercial—accruals—basis.

Cost of Capital and equipment (depreciation)	64,640	58,525	58,237
In-house provision[1]	290,330	276,109	267,021
Consultants/Contractors[2]	95,352	110,533	97,158
Total Costs	450,322	445,167	422,416

[2] "Contracted services and consultancy" have been taken to mean consultants/contractors.

ITSA, an executive agency of the Department of Social Security, supplies IT services to the DSS and its agencies and to other Government Departments and agencies including the Employment Service, the Northern Ireland Social Security Agency, the National Health Service Pensions Agency and the Department of Health. These costs are included in the above figures.

Family Credit

Mr. Booth: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what recent modifications he has made to family credit.

Mr. Roger Evans: In October 1994, we introduced new help with child care charges in family credit and in disability working allowance, housing benefit and council tax benefit. We estimate that, in the long term, around 150,000 families will benefit from this change, including 50,000 parents taking up work. This new help will provide a further incentive for people to take up and remain in employment.

In April 1994, the special fast-track family credit service was extended to those newly entering self-employment. Most of their claims are now being cleared within five working days. Improvements in the claiming process for all self-employed people have meant a four-day reduction in the average time taken to deal with their claims.

Income Support

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what estimate he has made of the numbers of owner-occupiers receiving help with mortgage interest payments through income support in 1994–95.

Mr. Roger Evans: The latest available information is that 548,000 income support claimants are receiving help with their mortgage interest payments.

Source: Income support statistics quarterly inquiry February 1994.

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what proposals he has to transfer to local authorities responsibility for the funding of income support claimants in care or nursing homes who have preserved entitlements to benefits.

Mr. Roger Evans: We have no plans to do so.

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has for alterations in industrial injury schemes which will affect the interests of actual or potential sufferers from asbestosis.

Mr. Hague: None, but under the long-term review of social security expenditure each part of the social security programme is being examined to ensure that the objectives are right for the 1990s and beyond.

Child Support

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many absent parents have withdrawn from employment after receiving Child Support Agency assessments since the Child Support Agency began operations.

Mr. Burt: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Selly Oak (Dr. Jones), on 12 July 1994, Official Report, column 569.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to amend the legislation or regulations applying to the Child Support Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Burt: The Government have been keeping the operation of the Child Support Act under close review for some time. We are now considering carefully the recent report of the Social Security Select Committee and will respond with proposals for change in due course.

Mr. Colvin: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on the fifth report of the Social Security Select Committee of Session 1993–94 entitled "The Operation of the Child Support Act-Proposals for Change."

Mr. Burt: We are still evaluating the contents of the Select Committee's report, which was published on 26 October and we will respond in due course with proposals for change. No final decisions have yet been taken.

Mr. Clappison: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he intends to publish the accounts of the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The Child Support Agency has today published its accounts for 1993–94 and a copy has been placed in the Library.

Disability Working Allowance

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many people have claimed disability working allowance since its inception; and if he will break down the figures by age and gender.

Mr. Hague: By 31 October 1994, 51,005 people had claimed disability working allowance. Information on age and gender is not available in the form requested. The breakdown of the number of awards from November 1992 to April 1994, the latest period for which figures are available, is in the table.

Awards of disability working allowance November 1992–April 1994

Age of recipients	Male	Female	All
Under 20	133	91	224
20 to 29	1,121	955	2,076
30 to 39	1,197	768	1,965
40 to 49	1,095	759	1,854
50 to 59	606	351	957
60 plus	139	32	171
All ages	4,291	2,956	7,247

SCOTLAND

Transplants

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give for (a) 1992, (b) 1993, and (c) the first 10 months of 1994, the number of (i) liver transplants, (ii) heart transplants, (iii) heart and lung transplants and (iv) lung transplants, both single and double, carried out in Scotland.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is set out in the table. Lung, and heart and lung transplants are not provided in Scotland.

Numbers of Heart and Liver Transplant Operations Performed in Scottish NHS Hospitals 1992–93 and January to October 1994

	1992	1993	January to October 1994[1]
Liver Transplant	6	30	22
Heart Transplant	21	22	13

[1] Data for 1994 provisional.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Lang: I cannot give the number of official Christmas cards I and my colleagues will send but I will write to the hon. Member when the information is available.

The costs will cost 15p each—excluding VAT—and will be issued by standard second class post. It is not possible to identify the staff time devoted to the dispatch of the cards.

A sample of the card, which depicts the Queen's view in Perthshire, has been placed in the Library.

Greater Glasgow Health Board

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the Scottish health service management executive to approve Greater Glasgow health board's acute strategy review; and when it will be published.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Greater Glasgow health board expects to conclude its review of acute and maternity services in December this year. Public consultation will follow.

Performance-related Pay

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which Scottish Office Department and which Scottish local enterprise companies operate on performance-related pay; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: In line with other Government Departments all Scottish Office non-industrial staff, excluding prison officers whose scheme comes into operation on 1 April 1995, are now covered by performance-related pay schemes.

Pay in the local enterprise companies is an operational matter for Scottish Enterprise and Highlands and Islands Enterprise. I have asked the chairmen of the enterprise bodies to write to the hon. Member.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he is taking to ensure that the grants from revenue currently available to community and voluntary groups in Strathclyde region will continue to be available after reorganisation of local government.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Government value highly the work of voluntary organisations in their local communities and wish to ensure a smooth hand-over from the existing to the new authorities. For this reason, the Scottish Office will make a direction under clause 55 of the Local Government etc. (Scotland) Act 1994 requiring each existing authority to inform shadow authorities of all funding which is given to voluntary organisations by means of a grant, service agreement or contract. This direction is designed to ensure that the new authorities are aware of the full extent and purpose of the existing authorities' funding of the voluntary sector, and in particular, of the full range of annual discretionary grants. This information will then inform their decision on assistance to community and voluntary bodies.

This direction complements the general provision in the Act for all existing liabilities, obligations and contracts entered into by existing authorities to be transferred to the new councils. This provision will safeguard contracts with voluntary bodies.

The Scottish Office will also issue guidance to the new authorities on the key role of voluntary organisations and the importance of avoiding disruption and delay in grant decision making.

New Town Development Corporations

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many houses for rent are currently held by each new town development corporation; and what percentage this represents of the total number of houses constructed by each development corporation since vesting day.

Mr. Stewart: The last published data are at 31 March 1994 and are set out in the table.

New Town	Houses for rent as at 31 March 1994	Percentage of total stock since vesting
East Kilbride	9,271	39.5
Glenrothes	5,151	40.9
Cumbernauld	4,686	32
Livingston	6,800	55.4
Irvine	3,609	62.3

Lobbying Companies

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the guidelines issued by his Department to regulate relationships with lobbying companies.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 November 1994]: My Department has no separate guidelines to regulate relationships with lobbying companies. Conditions of service for the staff of my Department incorporate the general principles of conduct that require civil servants not to misuse information which they acquire in the course of their duties; not to make use of their official position to further their private interests or those of others; and not to receive gifts, hospitality or benefits of any kind from a third party, which might be seen to compromise their personal judgment or integrity.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list and date those occasions over the last two years, when Ministers or officials in his Department have met lobbying companies, prior to a decision being made on the subject of the meeting with the lobbying company.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 November 1994]: This information is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Companies House

14. Mr. Jon Owen Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what discussions he has had with the President of the Board of Trade over the future of Companies House.

Mr. Redwood: My right hon. Friend has kept me fully informed of his review of Companies House.

Mid Glamorgan Health Authority

15. Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met the chairperson of the Mid Glamorgan health authority to discuss the future of the health service.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend met the then chairman of the Mid Glamorgan health authority on 22 March 1994 to discuss proposals for the future of health services in the Merthyr and Cynon valleys.

Unemployment

16. Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what has been the change in the number of unemployed since December 1992.

Mr. Redwood: Seasonally adjusted unemployment in Wales has now fallen by 19,000—14 per cent.—since December 1992. October's fall in the seasonally adjusted rate in Wales was the greatest in the United Kingdom.

25. Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is the level of male unemployment in Newport and Gwent at the latest available date.

Mr. Redwood: In October 1994, the number of unemployed males in the borough of Newport and Gwent were 5,154 and 13,741 respectively.

Local Authorities (Conduct)

17. Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what steps he is taking to improve standards of conduct in local authorities in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Such standards of conduct are primarily a matter for local authorities themselves and their auditors, taking account in particular of the national code of local government conduct, Welsh Office circular 23/90, and pecuniary interests of members of local authorities, Welsh Office circular 16/92. Where appropriate the Welsh Office reminds local authorities of their statutory responsibilities.

Manufacturing Industry

18. Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the prospects for manufacturing industry in Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Prospects for manufacturing industry in Wales are excellent. The latest CBI Wales survey shows that confidence in the Welsh business community is nearly double the United Kingdom average. New orders have increased at their fastest rate since 1988 and at twice the United Kingdom rate. The number of both export and domestic order books above normal levels is the highest since 1988, and the investment intentions of Welsh manufacturers are at their highest level since the survey began.

Health Service Funding

19. Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on health service funding in Wales during the current financial year.

Mr. Richards: The initial NHS budget for the current year was £2,076 million. This was £100 million more than last year—an increase of over 5 per cent. A further £8 million has been made available during the year.

Local Government Finance

20. Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what additional resources are to be made available to local authorities in Wales to undertake responsibilities which have been passed over to them from the Welsh Development Agency.

Mr. Redwood: I have issued £650,000 of additional credit approvals in 1994–95 and I will be providing £1.4 million in 1995–96.

Language Courses

21. Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will explain the difference in weighting attaching to courses for the teaching of the Welsh language to adults and the weighting as applied to the teaching of English; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: I understand that the Further Education Funding Council for Wales weights the funding per student of different courses according to the relative costs of provision. Since English as a second language is normally taught in small classes to students from a wide variety of linguistic and cultural backgrounds the costs per student are higher than those for second language Welsh courses. I also understand, however, that the funding council has decided to increase the weighting for Welsh second language courses next year.

Milk Marketing Scheme

22. Mr. Alan W. Williams: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on changes in the milk marketing scheme introduced on 1 November.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The essential features of the new arrangements were set out in the answer by my right hon. Friend the then Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food on 16 June, Official Report, columns 644–46. The necessary regulations were duly made and the new marketing arrangements came into effect on 1 November. Dairy Crest has not yet been floated on the stock market and remains in the ownership of the residual Milk Marketing Board.

Severn Bridge

23. Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his assessment of the effect on business and the environment of the Severn bridge tolls.

Mr. Redwood: A report by Pieda plc was published in 1992 by the Department of Employment. It concluded, on the basis of a survey of businesses in south Wales and Avon, that the second Severn crossing scheme allowing for the new tolls, would have a positive effect on local trading and commercial activity, and stimulate investment opportunities in south Wales. Copies of the executive summary of the report, entitled "The Economic Impact of the Second Severn Crossing", are in the Library of the House. No assessment has been made of the effect of the tolls on the environment.

Opt-out Schools

24. Mr. Murphy: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he last met leaders of county councils to discuss opt–out schools.

Mr. Richards: No such meetings have taken place.

Health Authorities

26. Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received on his proposals to create five new health authorities in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Since my announcement, there have been five representations, two of which were in support of my decision.

Gross Domestic Product

27. Mr. Rowlands: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of gross domestic product per capita in Mid Glamorgan as a percentage of the figure for (a) Wales and (b) south-east England.

Mr. Redwood: The latest available county data are for 1991, when GDP per head in Mid Glamorgan was estimated at £5,883. This represented 81.5 per cent. of the Welsh average and 59.1 per cent. of that for the south-east of England.

Milk

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many representations he has received on the effect of the change in price of milk since the inception of Milk Marque; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Four.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Minister's private offices, his flat in Cardiff and other official residences.

Mr. Redwood: This information is not held centrally. I do not have a personal flat in Cardiff. A small area of Cardiff headquarters office is available for Ministers and officials to stay the night, as well as being used for day-time meetings. Nothing will be spent on Christmas in this facility, and there are no official residences elsewhere.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to undertake and publish a training enterprise council employer survey and when.

Mr. Redwood: The fieldwork for a 1994 survey of employers has been completed on behalf of the seven Welsh training and enterprise councils, the Welsh Development Agency, the Development Board for Rural Wales, the Employment Service and the Welsh Office and a summary of preliminary findings issued in a Welsh Office statistical release on 31 August 1994, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House.

It is planned to produce a Welsh Office statistical publication summarising the findings of the survey by March 1995.

Gateway to Wales Hotel

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will sanction and fund the erection of reliable and substantial safety barriers between the carriageway and housing estates between the River Dee bridge and the Gateway to Wales hotel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The existing safety barriers on the A494-A550 trunk road at this location are of the type used nationally in similar circumstances and there are no proposals to alter or extend the existing fencing.

Bovine Tuberculosis

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cattle were slaughtered as a result of bovine TB in each region in each month since May 1994.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The number of cattle slaughtered as a result of bovine TB in each month in each county in Wales since May 1994 is as follows:

	Cattle Slaughtered
County	May	June	July	August	September	October
Clwyd	—	—	1	—	—	—
Gwynedd	—	—	—	—	—	—
Powys	—	—	2	4	—	—
Dyfed	29	25	54	7	12	253
South Glamorgan	—	—	—	—	—	—
West Glamorgan	—	—	—	—	—	—
Mid Glamorgan	—	—	—	—	—	—
Gwent	17	7	7	5	9	4

Badgers

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many badgers were culled as a result of bovine tuberculosis in each region in each month since May 1994; and how many of these were shown to be suffering from TB.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Eight badgers have been culled in Wales as a result of bovine TB since May 1994. All of these were in Dyfed, four in September and four in October. Three of the eight badgers showed lesions at post mortem consistent with being affected with bovine TB, although laboratory results in all eight badgers are still outstanding.

Job-related Training

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of the population is receiving job-related training; and how the figure relates to the standard Great Britain regions and the Great Britain average.

Mr. Redwood: Estimates are given in the following table:

Percentage of the resident population of working age [1] participating in job-related training [2] in the last 4 weeks [3]

Region	Percentage
Wales	12.6
Northern	12.8
Yorkshire and Humberside	13.8
East Midlands	12.2
East Anglia	12.3
London	14.1
Rest of South East	14.1
South West	13.3
West Midlands	12.3
North West	13.0
Scotland	12.5
Great Britain	13.2

[1] Working age is defined as men aged 16–64 and women aged 16–59.
[2] Education or training connected with the respondent's job, or a job they might be able to do in the future.
[3] Respondents are asked about job-related education and training activity in the four weeks prior to the survey.

Labour force survey, spring 1994.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Redwood: My Department employs one special adviser. Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Young People

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will estimate the number and percentage of 16 to 18-year-olds in Wales who are neither at school, employed or on youth training schemes.

Mr. Redwood: Estimates are given in the following table:

	Number	Percentage of 16–18 Population
16–18 year olds not at school, in employment or on YT schemes	29,000	29
Of whom:
At college	18,000	18
Other	11,000	11

Homelessness

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of registered homeless persons in the Ynys Môn borough council district on 1 September; and what was the equivalent figure for 1 September 1990 and 1 September 1987.

Mr. Richards: Numbers are available for persons and cases accepted as homeless in the Ynys Môn borough council district for the quarter ending 30 September each year and are shown as follows:

	Number of cases accepted as homeless	Number of persons in households accepted as homeless
1987	1	4

Mr. Ieuan Wyn Jones: To ask the Secretary of State of Wales what is the number of claimants currently accommodated in temporary bed-and-breakfast accommodation and receiving housing benefit in Ynys Môn; and what was the equivalent figure for 1 September 1990 and 1 September 1987.

Mr. Richards: Numbers are available for households in temporary bed-and-breakfast accommodation in the Ynys Môn borough council district on 30 September each year and are shown as follows:

	Resident in bed and breakfast accommodation
1994	1

No information is available as to whether individuals are claiming housing benefit or not.

EC Committee of the Regions

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he has yet received, from those who have convened the first meeting of the Reporting Back Forum for Wales representatives on the European Committee of the Regions, scheduled to take place of Thursday 24 November, an invitation to be a member or to attend this or subsequent forum meetings; what response he will give; and if he will make a statement on his policy towards the forum.

Mr. Redwood: I did not receive an invitation to the forum meeting convened on 24 November. The forum has been established by the two local authority associations. I have suggested that the associations should consider inviting MEPs and a selection of Welsh MPs from all four parties to join these discussions. I or one of my ministerial colleagues in the Welsh Office would be happy to attend a subsequent meeting.

Newcastle Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many cases of Newcastle disease were identified in each year since 1985.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: There have been no cases of Newcastle disease in Wales since 1985.

Mary Immaculate High School

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give a date for the repayment to the education committee of South Glamorgan county council the £70,000 run-off debt left by Mary Immaculate high school when it transferred to grant-maintained status on 31 March.

Mr. Redwood: It has been agreed with South Glamorgan county council that repayment of the budget deficit incurred by Mary Immaculate RC high school while under that local authority is to be effected by adjustments to the authority's revenue support grant over the remainder of the current financial year. The delay in putting this arrangement in place was due to South Glamorgan county council not notifying my Department of the actual size of the deficit until October.

Cardiff Bay Opera House

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairmen of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and the Millennium Fund Commission in relation to the choice of designing architect for the proposed Cardiff Bay opera house.

Mr. Redwood: The choice of architect is not a matter for me but I have spoken to the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation. I urged him to allow the public to have a full opportunity to see the different designs and give their views, and for these to be taken in account by the trustees in coming to their decision on which design to build.

Forests

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many and which local authorities have responded to the consultation paper "Our Forests, the Way Ahead"; and how many and which local authorities have expressed reservations about the proposal to continue with the disposal of woodland and the loss of public access in these woodlands.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Four local authorities in Wales have responded: Dyfed county council, Rhymney Valley district council, South Glamorgan county council and Vale of Glamorgan borough council. Each of these local authorities has expressed reservations about the proposals for securing public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission.

Water and Sewerage Charges

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from Welsh Water/Dwr Cymru cyf with respect to water and sewerage company access to the records of council tax band allocations for the purpose of graduated charging for water and sewerage.

Mr. Redwood: I have recently received correspondence from Dwr Cymru about a number of issues relating to its future charging structure.

Bathing Beaches

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the National Rivers Authority Wales region concerning the European and United Kingdom statutory regulations for beach cleanliness and bathing water standards in relation to Jackson's bay and Whitmore bay, Barry, Glamorgan.

Mr. Redwood: My officials are in regular contact with the National Rivers Authority, Welsh region, about the EC identified bathing waters on the Welsh coastline, including those at Barry.

Official Cars

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation concerning the capital cost and running cost of the chairman's and the chief executive's cars; what marque are these cards; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer 25 November 1994]: None. The chairman of Cardiff Bay development corporation uses a Jaguar pool car supplied jointly be the corporation and the Land Authority for Wales. The chief executive uses a leased Jaguar car to which he makes a substantial personal contribution in accordance with the scheme approved by my Department.

HEALTH

Community Care

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what was the total funding of care in the community in 1993–94; and what the projected amount will be for the next five years;

(2) if she will make a statement on the present funding for care in the community.

Mr. Bowis: The information requested is not available in the precise form requested. Total health and personal social services expenditure on services for mentally ill people for 1992–93 was £2.5 billion. These figures only include spending by the voluntary and private sector where purchased by health and social services.

Advertising

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish the final cost of each advertising campaign for 1993–94 referred to in her answer to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) of 14 February, Official Report, column 623.

Mr. Sackville: For those 1993–94 campaigns, which included advertising, listed in the earlier reply to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor), the advertising costs were:

Campaign	£000
AIDS Travelsafe	282
Blood Donor Recruitment	953
Community Care	339
Drug and Solvent Misuse	2,813
Health Service Professions Recruitment	125
Organ Donation	786
TV Fillers	50

Homelessness

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many permanent housing units for mentally ill homeless people have been provided under the Government initiative to supply homes for those needing a higher level of support launched in July 1990.

Mr. Bowis: As part of the Government's homeless mentally ill initiative, the Housing Corporation has approved proposals for 122 bed spaces to provide supported accommodation for mentally ill people. Proposals in respect of a further 40 are being considered. The level of support provided will vary depending on individual clients' needs.

In addition, 330 clients have already been found permanent places in existing accommodation. Many others have been placed in supported residential care for rehabilitation which it is hoped will eventually lead to permanent resettlement at a later date.

Northern Regional Health Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if the agreement between Fletcher Joseph Partnership and the Northern regional health authority is still in force; whether such agreements are currently under review by her Department or by other agencies; whether such agreements are deemed ultra vires; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The district auditor has made a confidential report to my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State under section 20(3) of the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990 concerning the transfer of the former Northern regional health authority's architects department to the Fletcher Joseph Partnership in 1990. After considering fresh legal advice obtained by the RHA, we have accepted the auditor's view that the agreement was ultra vires the authority on one narrow ground. We therefore regard the agreement as being no longer in force.

As a general principle, health authorities have the legal powers to make agreements with external contractors to transfer non-core health authority functions, such as architects services. In drawing up such agreements, health authorities need to take legal advice to ensure they are acting within their powers. The NHS executive has carried out a review of non-core NHS trading agencies and will be producing general guidance for authorities shortly.

Psychiatric Beds

Ms Jowell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many additional psychiatric beds would be needed in inner London to bring the average rate of bed occupancy to 85 per cent.

Mr. Bowis: The number of psychiatric beds is not the only factor influencing bed occupancy rates. The mental health task force's report on services for severely mentally ill people in London, "Priorities for Action", copies of which are available in the Library, found that increased availability of community services and good bed management strategies could reduce the pressure on acute beds. All inner London health authorities have agreed action plans to review their provision of acute psychiatric beds or alternative community-based accommodation and commission any necessary additional provision for 1995–96.

Pharmacists

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the expenditure on safes and secure cupboards and containers supplied to pharmacists for NHS use in each of the last three years.

Mr. Malone: Expenditure on these items is a matter for pharmacists and information is not available centrally.

Breast Cancer

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of studies on the incidence of breast cancer in women who have had an abortion; if she will be promoting any research into this correlation; and what advice on this subject she will be issuing to doctors and women.

Mr. Sackville: We have no information on the risks of developing breast cancer in women who have had an abortion. The report of recent Canadian research on this subject will be studied carefully by the Department.

Steroid Users

Mr. Tom Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance she will now give to needle exchange schemes and drug user clinics about the advice they give steroid users.

Mr. Bowis: We issued general guidance to health authorities in spring 1994 about the need to promote the health of drug misusers, including non-opiate drug misuse such as steroids. The guidance includes encouraging into treatment and care those not in touch with services and reducing health risks such as the spread of HIV. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Homoeopathy

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that national health service purchasing authorities and general practitioner fundholders will use the powers granted to them under the national health service reforms to facilitate homoeopathy where it is considered to be clinically appropriate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Both district health authorities and general practitioner fundholders purchase services to meet the health care needs of the patients and local populations for whom they are responsible, according to local circumstances and priorities. This includes the purchase of homeopathic services where this is appropriate.

Wheelchair Access

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she gives to health authorities and NHS trusts on street level access to NHS public buildings for disabled people and wheelchair users; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department issued advice to the national health service in 1989 under the title "Health Building Note 40, Common Activity Spaces, Volume 4, Designing for Disabled People". The scope of this guidance includes the design of ramps and stairways from street level into NHS buildings. Copies of the advice are available in the Library.

General Practitioner Lists

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 68, when she expects to be able to publish the data for 1993–94 on general practitioner lists.

Mr. Malone: Early next year.

Mental Health Beds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase the number of mental health beds in those areas where there is most need (a) during the current financial and (b) the next financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is for health authorities to determine the range and type of mental health services they purchase based on their assessment of the needs of their population.

Tobacco Advertising

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on her policy on the advertising of tobacco.

Mr. Malone: The Government are committed to ensuring that there are strong and effective controls on the advertising and promotion of tobacco products. We believe that voluntary agreements with the industry provide the best way of controlling tobacco advertising. In May 1994 we announced the main points of a revised voluntary agreement, which will significantly reduce levels of outdoor advertising and enhance the size and impact of health warnings on press and poster advertising. The new agreement will be published shortly.

Herbalists

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to allow the rights granted to herbalists in the Medicines Act 1968; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The rights granted to herbalists under the Medicines Act 1968 will continue.

Chiropractors

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to make treatment by qualified chiropractors available to patients on the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We believe that the professional recognition and regulation of the profession will encourage those purchasers who want to refer their patients for chiropractic treatment to do so. Provision within the national health service is a matter for local decision in the light of priorities and available resources.

Drugs Budget

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current level of the drugs budget in the national health service, both for hospitals and for general practitioners; what the cost was in 1979; and what has been the change in each year since then.

Mr. Malone: The latest provision for the cost of drugs in the family health services in 1994–95 is £3,217 million. The cost of drugs in the hospital and community health services is met from the total HCHS cash—limited allocation and a separate estimate for 1994–95 is not available. Information relating to earlier years is shown in the table.

	Total NHS spending on drugs £ million (rounded)
Year	FHS Drugs	Percentage Increase	HCHS Drugs	Percentage Increase
1979–80	633	—	156	—
1980–81	766	21.1	185	19.0
1981–82	786	14.4	214	15.5
1982–83	1,009	15.1	245	14.4
1983–84	1,130	12.0	267	8.9
1984–85	1,192	5.4	279	4.6
1985–86	1,275	7.0	297	6.4
1986–87	1,378	8.1	318	7.3
1987–88	1,536	11.5	352	10.6
1988–89	1,744	13.5	380	8.1
1989–90	1,942	11.4	414	8.8
1990–91	2,080	7.1	460	11.3
1991–92	2,317	11.4	591	28.4
1992–93	2,641	14.0	634	7.2
1993–94	2,951	11.7	[1]696	9.9

Note:
[1] Provisional.

Pharmacists

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what monitoring her Department undertakes to ensure that national health service prescriptions are properly dispensed by pharmacists.

Mr. Malone: None. Monitoring of the dispensing of national health service prescriptions by pharmacists is undertaken by the Royal Pharmaceutical Society through its professional regulatory machinery.

Herbal Remedies

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she has taken to satisfy herself that herbal products which do not require any licence under the terms of the Medicines Act 1968, rather than simply being exempt by sections 12 and 56 of that Act, will remain available under the provisions of the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have looked carefully at all the circumstances in which herbal products are sold and supplied. Those herbal products which require no licence under the Medicines Act will remain available under the new regulations.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether her recent announcement that herbal remedies currently exempt from licensing restrictions on their preparation under section 12 of the Medicines Act 1968 will remain exempt under the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations also applies to their exemption under section 56 of that Act from restrictions on the supply of such herbal remedies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The exemptions and public health safeguards for herbal medicines under section 56 of the Medicines Act 1968 will continue to apply under the new regulations.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what protection will be afforded by the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations for those products which are sold only to herbalists and other practitioners for use in their preparations but not directly to the public; and if she will make a statement.

(2) what assumptions her Department has made of whether products sold directly to herbalists and other practitioners are considered to be placed on the market in the context of European directives; whether or not they therefore fall within the licensing requirements of relevant European directives; what steps she is seeking to guarantee their continued availability; how their continued availability will be protected by the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Herbal products supplied to herbalists and other practitioners for use in their preparations but not directly to the public, which are currently exempt from product licensing requirements under the Medicines Act 1968, will retain their exemption under the proposed new regulations. This will be the case whether or not these products can be regarded as placed on the market.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration she has given to the proposals of the Natural Medicines Society for a simplified registration system for its preparations which would require the demonstration of safety and purity but not necessarily of efficacy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Herbal medicines covered by exemptions from product licensing requirements under section 12 of the Medicines Act 1968 will remain exempt. The need for a simplified registration scheme for such products does not therefore arise.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many representations her Department has received in total from individuals and from right hon. and hon. Members registering concern about the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations; and how many of these representations welcomed the regulations in question.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has received about 3,500 letters from individuals and over 1,000 letters from right hon. and hon. Members who were concerned about the possible effect of the proposed new regulations on herbal medicines. Our confirmation that herbal medicines currently exempt from product licensing requirements will continue to enjoy this exemption when the new regulations come into force has been generally welcomed.

Mrs. Anne Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether preparation of herbal products in the form of tinctures, extracts, powders and tablets falls outside the definition of industrial processes set by the European directive to be implemented through the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We are satisfied that herbal preparations in the forms described, which are prepared by traditional processes, are not "industrially produced" when supplied in accordance with section 12 of the Medicines Act. They will therefore continue to be exempt from product licensing requirements.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make available in the Library copies of all correspondence which she, her officials, and officials of the Medicines Control Agency have had with the European Commission in connection with the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations and in connection with relevant European directives.

Mr. Sackville: Such correspondence is regarded as confidential by the parties concerned. In my announcement of 11 November, I made clear our view in the position of herbal medicines under the relevant EC directive and the considerations that gave rise to that view.

Aromatherapy

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what basis she has formed the policy that products used in aromatherapy do not fall within the definition of medicines as established by relevant European directives; what provisions of the proposed new Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations will ensure their continued availability; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Products used in aromatherapy are medicinal products if used, sold or supplied for a medicinal purpose. The position of aromatherapy products currently exempt from product licensing requirements is unaffected by the proposed new regulations.

Casualty Services

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the decision by Cornwall and Isles of Scilly district family health services authority on the future of a casualty service for Falmouth and Penryn.

Mr. Sackville: This is under discussion locally and the hon. Member may wish to contact Dr. Stan Dennison, the chairman of Cornwall and Isles of Scilly health authority, for details.

Visiting Costs Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce a visiting costs scheme to help enable parents to visit their children in hospital.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Members for Ellesmere Port and Neston (Mr. Miller), for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) and for Crewe and Nantwich (Mrs. Dunwoody) on 1 November at columns 1081-82.

DEFENCE

Yugoslavia

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the situation in the former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Soames: The former Yugoslavia featured prominently in the debate in the House on 17 November, Official Report, columns 133–228, and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence made a further statement to the House on 21 November, Official Report, columns 341–48. We remain very concerned about the upsurge in fighting and are monitoring the situation closely.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices, his London flat in London and official residences.

Mr. Soames: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor) on 26 October, Official Report, column 706, concerning entertainment expenditure by my Department and its agencies.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Freeman: There are no plans for Ministers in this Department to send official Christmas cards this year.

Overseas Service Men (Training)

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans there are to encourage countries overseas to send service men for training in the United Kingdom; how much Her Majesty's Government charge for military training; how many personnel were sent to the United Kingdom in the last year; and what is the overall sum earned by the Ministry of Defence in providing such training.

Mr. Soames: My Department continues to encourage training in the United Kingdom by foreign and Commonwealth students as an important element of developing and strengthening relationships and ties with friendly nations. During the last financial year, 4,566 students from 98 different countries took part in training in the United Kingdom. The charges for training will depend on the length of the course, its syllabus and the number taking part; although central records are not maintained of the receipts from this activity, they are estimated to be around £39,500,000.

RAF Leeming

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of works at RAF Leeming in order to accommodate the proposed move there of 100 Squadron from RAF Finningley; and if he will itemise that expenditure.

Mr. Soames: The cost of works is estimated to be £10,000. This is for minor refurbishment of existing accommodation at RAF Leeming.

RAF Bases

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF bases in the United Kingdom have runways of 9,000 ft or over; and what proportion that is of all the RAF bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: Of the 72 RAF stations in the United Kingdom, excluding USAF bases, the following 11 have runways of 9,000 ft or over:

RAF Brize Norton
RAF Coningsby
RAF Cottesmore
RAF Finningley
RAF Lossiemouth
RAF Machrihansish
RAF Manston
RAF Marham
RAF St. Mawgan
RAF Waddington
RAF Wittering

RAF Scampton

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of disabling the fibre optic communications system at RAF Scampton and of providing a new junction point elsewhere.

Mr. Soames: The cost of disabling the fibre optic communications system is not expected to exceed £50,000. The equipment at RAF Scampton is not a junction point and will not therefore need to be relocated.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of providing safe access from the married quarters at RAF Scampton on to the A15.

Mr. Soames: If it is decided to close RAF Scampton, the existing married quarters will be used to meet the shortfall at RAF Waddington. An estimate of the cost of providing safe access from the married quarters on to the A15 will not be available until more detailed work is carried out on this related, but separate, project.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of the renovation of the small arms range at RAF Scampton; and what will be the cost of its decommissioning.

Mr. Soames: Approximately £3,000 was recently spent on minor refurbishment of the small arms range. The decommissioning of the range will consist of the de-leading and removal of sand which is carried out as a routine maintenance task every 18 months at a cost of £3,500.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what sums were spent at RAF Scampton in order to accommodate the Red Arrows in 1984; and under what heading that expenditure was made.

Mr. Soames: Details of this expenditure are no longer available.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of relocating the Central Flying School from RAF Scampton to other bases.

Mr. Soames: The total estimated cost is £3,000,000.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of keeping the married quarters open at RAF Scampton, but segregated from the main technical site; and under what headings this expenditure will be itemised.

Mr. Soames: If it is decided to close RAF Scampton, the existing married quarters will be used to meet the shortfall at RAF Waddington. It will not be possible to provide an estimate of the costs requested until more detailed work is carried out on this related, but separate, project. The main cost headings are likely to be access, internal roads, perimeter fencing and provision of facilities.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of recommissioning RAF Church Fenton and other associated works to prepare for the possible move there from RAF Scampton of the Short Brothers units; and if he will itemise that expenditure.

Mr. Soames: Only minor works services would be required at RAF Church Fenton at an estimated cost of £20,000.

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what will be the cost of providing replacement receipt and dispatch facilities for the operation of the priority flight delivery service at another RAF base if the facilities at RAF Scampton are closed.

Mr. Soames: It is anticipated that the priority freight delivery service task would be subsumed within the existing infrastructure of other RAF bases. Relocation costs have been identified and should not exceed £10,000.

Air Misses

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint air miss working group report on the air miss between an RAF Bulldog and a US Air Force F11 over East Lothian on 26 June 1991.

Mr. Soames: A copy of this report is available in the Library of the House.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the joint air miss working group report on the air miss between an RAF Bulldog and an RAF Tornado near Tranent on 11 May 1992.

Mr. Soames: A copy of this report is available in the Library of the House.

Low Flying

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State of Defence if he will list the dates, locations, and nature of the activity notified, for all instances in which helicopter operators have been informed of particularly intense military low-flying activities in accordance with paragraph 2.4 of aeronautical information circular 156/1993, dated 21 October 1993.

Mr. Soames: The aeronautical information circular, AIC, 156/1993 was replaced by AIC 73/1994 dated 30 June following a working group review of the pipeline inspection notification system—PINS.

The requirement of paragraph 2.4 of AIC 156/1993 does not feature in the new AIC since the working group was satisfied that, in practice, all intense military low-flying activity was already notified to helicopter operators under the existing notice to airmen, NOTAM, system and there was no requirement for additional arrangements.

Since 21 October 1993, almost 6,000 NOTAMs have been issued, covering various types of air activity. To identify those which warned specifically of intense military low-flying activity would incur disproportionate cost.

Air Safety

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the actions taken by his Department in response to each of the recommendations of the Air Accidents Investigation Branch's reports on the military-civil collisions on 29 August 1991 and 23 June 1993.

Mr. Soames: As a result of the accident on 29 August 1991, my Department in conjunction with other authorities has implemented the recommendations made by the Air Accidents Investigation Branch, as follows:

(i) Greater publicity of the civil aircraft notification procedure—CANP—and its benefits has been achieved through articles in general aviation safety leaflets and briefings to civil pilots at a number of open evenings.

(ii) Extension of the CNAP system to encompass civil aerial work carried out below 1,000 ft was introduced in August 1993.

(iii) Information has been published showing the directional flow of aircraft in the few areas of high-intensity low-flying operations and RAF stations operating fast jets have been identified.

As far as the accident on 23 June 1993 is concerned, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Orkney and Shetland (Mr. Wallace) on 7 July, Official Report, column 264. My Department continues to work with the appropriate authorities and organisations in order to maximise flight safety in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many notifications have been made under (a) the civil aircraft notification procedure and (b) the pipeline inspection notification system in each month from October 1993 onwards; and how many reports have been received in each month of (a) breaches of notified areas by military aircraft and (b) non-compliance with notifications by civil aircraft.

Mr. Soames: Under the civil aircraft notification procedure only commercial activity attracts temporary avoidance status; details of recreational and other aerial activity are passed as warnings to military aircrew who will take account of them in planning their sorties. The numbers of notifications, broken down by type of activity, received in each month since October 1993 are as follows:

	Commercial activity	Recreational and other aerial activity
1993
October	50	79
November	10	52
December	5	13
1994
January	15	31
February	26	63
March	22	40
April	40	65
May	59	117
June	58	106
July	57	134
August	62	90
September	34	81
October	35	95

Since October 1993, there have been six reported breaches of avoidances accorded to commercial activity; three in June 1994, one in September 1994 and two in October 1994.

Under the pipeline inspection notification system a summary of all relevant activity is issued daily from Monday to Friday. Each summary comprises several individual notifications; it would incur disproportionate cost to identify the total number of notifications made.

Notification under PINS attract the same status as recreational and other aerial activity notified under CANP. They constitute a warning of activity, but do not attract avoidance status; they cannot, therefore, be breached.

Participation in CANP or PINS by civil pilots is on a voluntary basis, the question of non-compliance does not therefore arise, nor is there any mechanism for identifying civil activity which could have been but was not notified.

Pipeline Inspection Notification System

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the outcome of the review of the first six months of operation of the pipeline inspection notification system; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Soames: The review of the pipeline inspection notification system was carried out by a working group chaired by the National Air Traffic Service on which my Department, the Civil Aviation Authority, the British Helicopter Advisory Board, helicopter operators and companies making use of pipeline inspection services were all represented.

The group's main recommendations were that the system be made more flexible to allow more precise notifications of pipeline inspection activity, and that details of the areas in which military fast jets are permitted to fly below 250 ft be incorporated in the revised AIC.

No formal report was produced. The group's recommendations were, however, incorporated into the revised system which was notified to air users in the aeronautical information circular 73/1994 issued by the Civil Aviation Authority on 30 June 1994.

Red Arrows

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when it is proposed to relocate the Red Arrows; and what is the planned expenditure at that base to accommodate them.

Mr. Soames: It is proposed to relocate the Red Arrows to RAF Marham in October 1995 at a total estimated cost of £3 million.

RAF Bases

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which RAF bases are supplied by underground fuel pipelines; and what proportion this is of all RAF bases in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: Of 35 RAF flying stations in the United Kingdom, including three USAF bases, 18 are connected to the military pipeline system which provides aviation fuel. The remainder are supplied by road.

Nuclear Weapons Store

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if details of the nuclear weapons store at USAF Lakenheath are supplied to Her Majesty's Government; and what provision is made for the store to be subject to the consent of Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Soames: Inspection and formal approval by the relevant United Kingdom authorities is required before any facility may be used for the storage of nuclear weapons in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what responsibility he has for organising emergency plans involving all the local emergency services in relation to the nuclear weapons store at USAF Lakenheath; and how frequently the emergency plan is tested.

Mr. Soames: The Ministry of Defence is the lead Department for the response to any accident involving a nuclear weapon in the United Kingdom. Generic contingency plans exist which take account of the responsibilities of the civil emergency services. Response arrangements, including joint United Kingdom—United States arrangements, are regularly tested; the most recent major exercise took place in April and included full participation by the local authorities and civil emergency services in Suffolk.

RAF Lakenheath

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people have been (a) arrested, (b) charged, (c) convicted and (d) acquitted over matters relating to byelaws at RAF Lakenheath in each of the last three years.

Mr. Soames: The figures are as follows:

	1992	1993	1994
(a) Arrested	—	3	—
(b) Charged	—	3	—
(c) Convicted	—	—	—
(d) Acquitted	—	—	—

Nurse Elaine Dugard

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) when it was first known that Elaine Dugard, a petty officer registered nurse, had contracted the HIV virus;

(2) between which dates Elaine Dugard worked as a nurse at the royal naval hospital in Plymouth;

(3) between which dates Elaine Dugard worked in the casualty unit at the royal naval hospital in Plymouth.

Mr. Soames: While I can confirm that nurse Dugard worked a the royal naval hospital Plymouth, it is not my Department's practice to give details of an individual's service employment or medical records.

Haymes Garth

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department received the report from KPMG Peat Marwick into spending at Haymes Garth; if he will allow officers named in the report the opportunity to comment on it before its publication; when he expects to publish the report; and what is the estimated cost of conducting the inquiry.

Mr. Soames: KPMG Peat Marwick has not yet submitted its final report on Haymes Garth. Draft extracts have been shown to the individuals who were interviewed in the course of the investigation, and the report is now being finalised in the light of their comments. Once the report has been received we shall want to give its findings careful consideration. The latest estimate of the cost of employing KPMG Peat Marwick to undertake this work is around £100,000.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest estimate of the amount that will have been spent for the recent refurbishment and redecoration of official service residence Haymes Garth in Gloucestershire; who was the officer responsible for overseeing this budget; what is the present valuation of Haymes Garth; and on how many occasions those responsible for the refurbishment and redecoration travelled overseas to discuss details of the changes proposed.

Mr. Soames: Final reconciliation of the full costs of refurbishment and redecoration of Haymes Garth is in hand. Current indicators are that the total will be slightly lower than the figure given in my predecessor's statement on 4 July, Official Report, column 85, but I shall report the final figure to the House as part of the further statement I have promised. In the light of the on-going study into this particular case it would be inappropriate at this stage to name any individual.

Although informal assessments of the value of Haymes Garth have been made to assist the investigations, there has been no recent full commercial valuation.

The cost of refurbishment and redecoration includes two brief liaison visits to Germany by a contractor.

Accountancy System

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the value of the contract awarded to SEMA to install and run a commercially based accountancy system.

Mr. Freeman: This is a matter for the Defence Research Agency and I have asked the chief executive, Mr. Chisholm, to answer direct.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Tam Dalyell, dated 28 November 1994:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question concerning the value of the contract awarded to SEMA to install and run a commercially based accountancy system.

DRA's Commercial Accounting System (CAS) was developed to facilitate the creation of the Trading Fund in April 1993. The System is one of the largest integrated accounting systems operating in the United Kingdom. Five software companies received orders of £0.5 million or more. SEMA was one of those companies and its contribution was worth £1.2 million.

The running of the CAS is undertaken in-house by DRA's Financial Accounting Department. It places a number of support contracts for various services. SEMA has a contract to supply a Financial Systems Management service. This was awarded in August 1993 and the payments to December 1994 are expected to be £0.7 million

Research Agency

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will state the background and qualifications of the new chief executive of the Defence Research Agency.

Mr. Freeman: We have no plans to replace the current chief executive of the DRA, John Chisholm. Mr. Chisholm graduated from Cambridge university with a BA in mechanical sciences and is a member of the Institute of Electrical Engineers. He has extensive experience in the service industries, having held senior positions in CAP Scientific and the SEMA group. He has been chief executive of the DRA since July 1991.

Military Equipment

Sir Cranley Onslow: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what items of military equipment of British manufacture are being evaluated by the United States Government under the provisions of the foreign competitive testing programme for 1995; and what items of British manufacture have been bought by the United States Government since that programme was first set up in 1990.

Mr. Freeman: The United States Government have recently announced that six items of military equipment of British manufacture have been authorised for evaluation under the provisions of the United States foreign comparative testing programme for 1995. These are: automatic chemical agent alarm; small projected line charge; acoustic cladding underwater repair system; advanced short range air-to-air missile; mini strike initiator; and minimum operating strip lighting kit. Since 1990, the United States Government have announced the purchase of six items of British manufacture as a result of successful FCT evaluations. These are: chemical agent monitor; improved chemical agent monitor; impressed current cathodic protection; aerial target vector scoring system; versatile exercise mine system; and enhanced electronic warfare scenario generator.

Operational Requirements

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Mr. Mike Wood, currently the United Kingdom marketing executive for Lockheed, and his deputy, Mr. Richard Lumb, were, when employed by his Department, privy to confidential information on the RAF's future operational requirements including its plans to refurbish or replace the Herclus C-130K aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: All Crown servants, including officers in Her Majesty's armed forces, are bound by regulations governing the acceptance of outside appointments. The rules ensure that when a Crown servant accepts outside employment no cause for suspicion of impropriety exists. I am satisfied that both Mr. Wood and Mr. Lumb abided by these rules.

Hercules Fleet

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the target availability of the Hercules fleet required to enable it to meet its budgeted flying hours requirement.

Mr. Freeman: Aircraft availability dictates the number of aircraft that are available for tasking to meet commitments on any particular day. This is not linked directly to the budgeted annual flying hours requirement as each aircraft does not necessarily fly the same number of hours.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the impact on budgeted flying hours if his Department proceeds with its plan to offer up for sale up to 10 of the older aircraft.

Mr. Freeman: There is no plan to offer for sale any of the Hercules fleet. An advertisement was placed by my Department in September to assess the potential market for RAF Hercules should they become available for sale.

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the budgeted flying hours for Hercules C130 fleet in each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: Budgeted flying hours are as follows:

	1992–93	1993–94	1994–95
Hercules air transport aircraft	33,990	33,990	34,058
Hercules tanker aircraft	2,901	2,901	2,901

There has been an increase in the number of budgeted flying hours for Hercules air transport aircraft this year to accommodate reservist aircrew flying trials.

Biological Weapons (Russia)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his Russian counterpart concerning the termination of Russian production facilities for biological weapons.

Mr. Soames: Following a joint statement signed in September 1992 the Governments of Russia, United Kingdom and United States are conducting discussions with the intention of establishing confidence in Russian compliance with the biological and toxic weapons convention.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the total cost to his Department in developing the privatisation plans for the royal dockyards.

Mr. Freeman: During the period between 18 October 1993, when my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced our policy towards the future management of the dockyards, Official Report, 18 October 1993, columns 39-41, and 31 October 1994, total identifiable expenditure for work associated with developing and implementing plans for the proposed privatisation of the royal dockyards amounts to some £7.2 million. Given that the current dockyard management contracts are due to expire no later than April 1996, my Department would expect to have incurred in any case costs for work related to any future management arrangements for the royal dockyards.

Land Mines

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has had with his (a) United States, (b) Russian and (c) Italian counterparts concerning the banning of the export and import of anti-personnel land mines.

Mr. Freeman: The United kingdom is in the forefront of international efforts to establish rules for the responsible use and transfer of anti-personnel land mines. Discussions have been held with a number of states, including the United States, Russia and Italy, in the context of the UN weaponry convention review conference and in respect of other initiatives. Our aim is to establish international arrangements which will command widespread respect and adherence.

Written Answers to Questions

Tuesday 29 November 1994

PRIME MINISTER

State Property Inventories

Mr. Redmond : To ask the Prime Minister if he will give the dates on which state property inventories have been checked since 1980.

The Prime Minister: Departments are responsible for maintaining records of property which they hold for their specialised or operational use. Property Holdings maintains a record for the common user office estate. No central record is kept and the information requested could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what evidence he has to support the public statement of Mrs. Stella Rimmington that MI5 had assisted in the tracking down and issue of warrants for the culprits of the Lockerbie crime; and if he will place in the Library the report of the conduct and knowledge of MI5 about terrorist threats against airliners in October to December 1988.

The Prime Minister: The greater part of the Security Service's efforts is directed to countering terrorism.

As I made clear in reply to my hon. Friend, the Member for Ravensbourne (Sir J. Hunt), on 14 July Official Report, column 712, it remains the Government's policy not to provide information on the operations of the security and intelligence agencies. I have, therefore, nothing further to add to what the Director-General has already said.

Engagements

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 29 November.

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Tuesday 29 November.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Zoological Society

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Prime Minister what assessment he has made of the conduct of the council of the Zoological Society of London in respect of its adherence to its constitution and its performance of its objectives; and if he will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The Zoological Society of London is an autonomous body operating under a royal charter. Ensuring adherence to the charter is not a matter for the Government.

Government

Mr. Kaufman: To ask the Prime Minister how many members there are of his Administration, including Whips, (a) in the House of Commons, (b) in the House of Lords, (c) in neither and (d) in total; and if he will provide comparable figures for November 1989, November 1984 and May 1979.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of public record. The information requested can be obtained from the Library of the House.

Ministers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Prime Minister what was the number of Ministers in Her Majesty's Government in each year since 1979.

The Prime Minister: This is a matter of public record. The information requested can be obtained from the Library of the House.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prevention of Terrorism Acts

Mr. Stott: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to review the exclusion orders placed upon those people under the Prevention of Terrorism Acts, with particular reference to John Matthews; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: The Government hope that the day is approaching when exclusion orders will no longer be needed but we are not prepared to lower our guard prematurely. There are currently 61 orders in force which I or my predecessors have made and I keep the need for them under review.

Wheel Clamping

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to introduce legislation to regulate those who seek to clamp vehicles parked on private land.

Mr. Maclean: Following the consultation process completed last year, the Government are considering what action it would be appropriate to take in respect of wheel clamping on private land. Our aim is to ensure that any measure introduced to prevent or deter irresponsible and heavy-handed wheel clamping on private land does not prevent sensible measures being taken to control genuine parking problems.

We will make an announcement as soon as possible.

National Criminal Intelligence System

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what were the total costs involved in the integrated national criminal intelligence system project; which computer company provided the equipment; and what consultants were employed.

Mr. Maclean: From the project's initiation in autumn 1989 to its termination in February 1993 total costs involved in the integrated national criminal intelligence system were £1.447 million. No computer equipment was provided as the project did not proceed beyond the design stage. The private sector firms engaged as consultants were Computer Sciences Co. Ltd. Grafton Database Associates Ltd, Hoskyns', PA Consultants, Software AG and World Quality Systems.

Airports (Immigration officers)

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list those United Kingdom airports receiving scheduled flights from abroad which do not have permanent, full-time immigration service staff stationed at the airport.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The airports are Belfast (International), Teeside, Humberside, Biggin Hill, Eastleigh (Southampton), Exeter and Kirkwall (Orkney). At six of these locations arrangements exist to provide immigration coverage from the nearest permanently staffed port or office. The exception is Kirkwall where immigration coverage of scheduled flights is provided by customs officers under the provisions of paragraph 1(1) of schedule 2 to the Immigration Act 1971.

Probation and Community Service Orders

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of unexecuted warrants (a) for breach of probation orders and (b) for breach of community services orders in each probation service area in England and Wales, and in total in England and Wales in (i) 1991, (ii) 1992 and (iii) 1993 and on the latest date for which figures were available.

Mr. Maclean: The information is not available centrally.

Camera Surveillance

Mr. Etherington: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what guidance is issued to (a) local authorities and (b) police authorities regarding responsibility to display signs warning of the existence of camera surveillance when it is used to monitor on-street activity in city or town centres;

(2) what guidance is issued to (a) local authorities and (b) police authorities regarding the preservation of privacy for domestic and office premises within CCTV field of vision, where closed circuit television is used to monitor on-street activities in city or town centres.

Mr. Maclean: The Government issued good practice guidelines to local authorities and police authorities on the use of closed circuit television in public places earlier this month. Where cameras are not place prominently the guide recommends that there should be clear signs indicating that a CCTV system is in operation. The guide also recommends the development of local codes of practice for each scheme so that due attention is given to issues of privacy.

Police Authority Membership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of those submitted by the independent selection process for nomination as independent members of English police authorities were (a) women, (b) from ethnic minorities, (c) from the voluntary sector, (d) businessmen, (e) educationists and (f) lawyers; and what proportion (i) of each group and (ii) in total remained on the list after the Home Office review of the suggested names.

Mr. Maclean: Nominations have been received in respect of 36 of the 37 English police authorities. The Home Secretary has considered 35 of these, and the information is as follows:

	Selection Panels' Lists (Total = 686)		Home Secretary's Lists (Total = 342)
	(a) Number	(b) percentage of 686	(c) Number	(d) Percentage of 342	(e) Percentage of (a)
Women	192	30	73	21.3	38
Ethnic Minorities	52	7.6	23	6.7	44.2
Voluntary Sector	35	5.1	10	2.9	28.6
Businessmen	262	38.1	167	48.8	63.7
Educationalists	114	16.6	30	8.8	26.3
Lawyers	23	3.4	10	2.9	43.5

It is not possible to calculate a total figure, as many of the candidates fall into more than one of the categories listed.

Hunt Saboteurs

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance has been given to the police in relation to the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 in particular in relation to their treatment of hunt saboteurs.

Mr. Maclean: On Royal Assent, we issued to all police forces a circular and introductory guide on the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994. Copies have been put in the Library of the House. The information provided is explanatory rather than interpretative. The application of the provisions in respect of the offence of aggravated trespass is an operational matter for chief officers.

Adoption

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many babies adopted by British residents in Romania and in India have been (a) granted or (b) refused admission; and how many appeals against refusal have been (i) rejected and (ii) successful in each of the last five years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Statistics relating to children entering the United Kingdom with a view to adoption are not collected centrally.

Firearms

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the estimated cost to police in operating the firearms licensing system in respect of each of the categories of firearms fees listed in the table in his answer of 21 July, Official Report, column 282.

Mr. Maclean: The estimated costs[1] for each category for the year 1993–94 are as follows:-

Firearm Certificate Issue	593,000
Shot Gun Certificate Issue	1,303,000
Shot Gun Certificate Renewal	3,460,000
Registered Firearm Dealer Issue of Certificate	20,000
Home Office Club Approval	[2]1,650

[2] No certificates for Home Office club approval fell due for renewal during 1993–94.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the best practice costs detailed in the 1991 guidelines issued to chief police officers for (a) the issue and renewal of a firearm certificate, (b) the issue and renewal of a shot gun certificate, (c) the issue of a certificate to a registered firearm dealer and (d) Home Office club approval.

Mr. Maclean: The models of best practice for the administration of the firearms licensing system issued to chief officers of police in 1991 do not include costings.

Costings of best practice are contained in a subsequent study undertaken in 1992 by the independent consultants Ernst and Young. The costings identified, for both uniformed and civilian staff, are as follows:

	Uniformed Procedure	Civilian Procedure
Firearm Certificate
Issue	55.57	36.18
Renewal	12.12	10.23
Shot Gun Certificate
Issue	44.11	28.92
Renewal	11.18	9.08
Registered Firearms Dealer
Issue of Certificate	124.52	77.72
Home Office Club
Approval	92.26	57.64

Young Offenders

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what are the rates for re-offending for those aged under 21 years within (a) two years and (b) four years in each year since 1990 for those punished with each of the possible sentences listed in his answer of 20 July, Official Report, columns 267–68, for offences of assault or criminal damage;

(2) what are the rates for re-offending within four years for those aged under 21 years in each year since 1990 for those punished with each of the sentences listed in his answer of 20 July, Official Report, columns 267–68, for the offences of (a) burglary of a dwelling-house and (b) burglary of buildings;

(3) what are the comparable rates for re-offending within two years for those under 21 years in each year since 1990 for those convicted of (i) theft from shops, (ii) theft of a motor vehicle and (iii) theft from a motor vehicle by a sentence of (a) absolute or conditional discharge, (b) fine, (c) bind over of parent, (d) supervision order, (e) attendance centre order, (f) community service order, (g) probation order, (h) combination order and (i) detention in a young offender institution;

(4) what are the rates for re-offending within two years for those aged under 21 years in each year since 1990 for those punished with each of the sentences listed in his answer of 20 July, Official Report, columns 267–68, for the offences of (a) burglary of a dwelling-house and (b) burglary of buildings;

(5) what are the rates for re-offending within four years for those aged under 21 years in each year since 1990 for those punished with each of the sentences listed in his answer of 20 July, Official Report, columns 296–68, for the offences of (a) theft from shops, (b) theft of a motor vehicle and (c) theft from a motor vehicle.

Mr. Maclean: The available information on re-offending is on the rate of reconviction for offenders who commence probation and community service and for sentenced prisoners who are discharged from Prison Service establishments. The latest available information relates to a two-year period following the commencement of an order or the discharge from prison during 1990.

The table gives two-year reconviction rates for those aged under 21 at commencement of their order or aged under 21 when sentenced to a custodial sentence.

These comparisons do not make allowance for the different nature of offenders, with different risks of reconviction, who receive different sentences nor for the fact that for those commencing community penalties there is a greater likelihood of being convicted in the early part of the follow-up period for offences which were committed before the period started. These issues will be addressed in a report in preparation—"Explaining reconviction rates: a critical analysis", a Home Office research study.

Two year reconviction rates[1] for those aged under 21 at commencement of probation and community service orders and for those aged under 21 when sentenced to a custodial sentence by type of original offence[2] based on samples of offenders commencing order or discharged during 1990

England and Wales—percentages and numbers

Two year reconviction rates[1] for those aged under 21 at commencement of probation and community service orders and for those aged under 21 when sentenced to a custodial sentence by type of original offence[2] based on samples of offenders commencing order or discharged during 1990

England and Wales—percentages and numbers

Disposal	Theft of a motor vehicle[3]	All offenders	Assault[3]	Criminal damage[4]	Burglary in a dwelling	Burglary of a building	Theft from a motor vehicle[4]	Theft from shops[4]
Young offender institution
Reconviction rate	89	72	57	60	77	83	75	81
Number in sample[6]	528	5,932	722	764	825	600	546	970

[1] Reconviction rates are for offences on the 'standard list'. These include all indictable offences and more serious summary offences. A definition of standard list offences is contained in Appendices 4 and 5 of "Criminal statistics England and Wales 1993" (Cm 2680).
[2] The most recent standard list offence recorded in the period up to and including the commencement or discharge date. This may on occasions not be the offence for which the sentence is passed.
[3] This consists of wounding with intent to do grievous bodily harm or to resist apprehension, wounding or inflicting grievous bodily harm (inflicting bodily injury with or without a weapon), assault occasioning actual bodily harm, assault with intent to resist apprehension or assault on a person assisting a constable and assault on a constable but does not include common assault as all but a few rare subclasses of common assault are not standard list offences.
[4] On account of the relatively low numbers for some of the disposals in the samples for offences of criminal damage, theft from a motor vehicle and theft from shops the quoted figures are based on pooling samples over the period 1987 to 1990.
[5] This consists of theft or unauthorised taking of a motor vehicle and stealing and unauthorised taking of a conveyance.
[6] The number in the samples are given for information. The reconviction rate based on the smallest sample (ie. that for community service and the offence of burglary in a dwelling) could range by chance by about plus or minus 8 percentage points. The rate will be generally more accurately determined as the numbers sampled increase.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of 10 to 16-year-olds found guilty or cautioned for each year since 1981.

Mr. Maclean: The information is given in the table.

Number of 10–16 year olds found guilty or cautioned[1] for all offences 1981–1993

England and Wales

Year	Found guilty	Cautioned[1]	Found guilty and cautioned[1]
1981	118,260	108,237	226,497
1982	110,018	112,684	222,702
1983	100,445	115,437	215,882
1984	93,271	119,848	213,119
1985	82,631	134,567	217,198
1986	62,630	113,496	176,126
1987	53,597	114,401	167,998
1988	46,850	101,375	148,225
1989	40,373	96,627	137,000
1990	37,255	112,081	149,336
1991	32,544	105,662	138,206
1992	29,006	112,867	141,873
1993	29,260	99,870	129,130

[1] Excludes motoring offences.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Howard: My Department employs two special advisers.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Prisoners (Drugs and Alcohol)

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what facilities there are for treating those with drug or alcohol problems who are being held in prison in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 29 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on what facilities there are for treating those with drug or alcohol problems who are being held in prison in the United Kingdom.

All prisons within England and Wales provide prisoners with access to education, treatment and counselling services for substance misuse via the prison health care centre, the probation service or outside drug agencies. Some but not all of the facilities are already used by both alcohol and drug misusers.

As part of the new Prison Service drugs strategy, to be launched during January 1995, all prison governors will be required to develop and implement local drug strategies which will form part of their contract with their area manager. The local strategies will include provision for education, treatment and throughcare services for prisoners who misuse, have misused or are at risk of misusing drugs.

The Prison Service will also be launching the first phase of the implementation of a range of treatment programmes throughout Prison Service establishments during 1995. The different programmes will be evaluated.

The Scottish Office and Northern Ireland Office will be able to provide information on the provision of treatment programmes for prisoners with drug or alcohol problems in Scotland and Northern Ireland.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of those with drug or alcohol problems currently being held in prison in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Dr. Lynne Jones, dated 29 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question on the number of prisoners with drug or alcohol problems being held in prison in the United Kingdom.

During 1993 the Home Office Addicts Index was notified of 3,764 drug addicts identified by prison medical officers within the United Kingdom. Prisoners addicted to alcohol addiction are not reflected within this figure.

There are currently no central records of the number of alcohol addicted prisoners in England and Wales.

Secure Training Centres

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what research he has received to support the need for the creation of secure training centres; and if he will publish these reports.

Mr. Maclean: The Home Office commissioned two pieces of research on persistent young offenders, both of which confirmed the existence of a small number of young people who are responsible for a disproportionate amount of crime.

The first was a survey of police forces undertaken by the Home Office during 1992. It is contained in annex B to the memorandum of evidence submitted for the sixth report from the Home Affairs Select Committee, Session 1992–93: HC441-II, "Juvenile Offenders".

The second was commissioned from the Policy Studies Institute and is entitled "Persistent Young Offenders". Its findings were published in February 1994.

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what bids he has received for the running of the secure training centres.

Mr. Maclean: Twenty-five organisations have indicated an interest in tendering to finance, build or refurbish, operate and maintain secure training centres. We expect to receive firm bids in response to invitations to tender, the first of which will issue within a few weeks.

Criminal Records

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department under what circumstances the new criminal records system, Phoenix, will hold personal data which relate to individuals who have been acquitted, or who are not prosecuted; and if he will make a statement on how long such data are retained.

Mr. Maclean: Data relating to acquittals and to cases discontinued without a caution will be deleted from the Phoenix system within 42 days of the date of notification, save for certain exceptional cases in which the data will be retained for a longer period. Rules closely defining these exceptional cases are currently being produced by the police service in consultation with the Home Office and the Data Protection Registrar, and I shall make an announcement once they have been finalised.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to introduce legislation which relates criteria for the retention of personal data which describes the analysis of DNA samples, fingerprints and criminal records to the seriousness of the offence; if he will list the current retention criteria; and on what statute the retention criteria is based.

Mr. Maclean: Legislation relating the retention of fingerprints, samples used for DNA profiling, and national criminal records to the seriousness of the criminal offence already exists. Under section 27 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, fingerprints may be retained where the offender has been convicted of a recordable offence, and criminal convictions may be retained in national records where the offender has been convicted of such an offence. Recordable offences are defined in the National Police Records (Recordable Offences) Regulations 1985. Records of convictions for offences which are not recordable may be held in local police collections. Under section 64 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984, as amended by the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994, a sample taken from any person for DNA profiling purposes may be retained if it was taken in the course of an investigation as a result of which a person was convicted of a recordable offence. Samples from persons not convicted of an offence cannot be used in evidence against the person or for any investigation. Their retention is for technical, administrative and legal reasons.

The current practice is that criminal records for recordable convictions are retained by the National Identification Bureau for 20 years, provided that there have been no subsequent convictions; if, however, the conviction involves either homicide or terrorism, the record is retained indefinitely; and if the conviction involves indecency or illicit drugs, or a custodial sentence was imposed, or the record reveals mental illness, the record will be retained until the subject reaches 70 years of age.

Fingerprints are retained until the whole of the associated criminal record is deleted. Rules for the retention of criminal records on the Phoenix application of the police national computer will comply with the requirements of the Data Protection Act and are being developed by the police service in consultation with the Government and Data Protection Registrar. Detailed rules for the retention of samples taken for DNA profiling within the statutory framework set out above are currently being prepared, but the work is at an early stage.

Anabolic Steroids

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment his Department made of the legal status of anabolic steroids in Spain before he made his announcement of 2 November.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The Advisory Council on the Misuse of Drugs, on whose recommendations the Government's proposals are based, made no specific assessment although were aware of the controls on anabolic steroids in the European Union member states and in a number of other countries. We understand that in Spain, as currently in the United Kingdom, anabolic steroids are subject to the law governing medicines and may be supplied lawfully only on prescription.

Automated Facial Recognition

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on his Department's research into automated facial recognition from photographs.

Mr. Maclean: The Department's work aims to ensure that the police are able to make maximum use of both images and eye witness reports in the investigation of crime. The first stage will be the provision of images to accompany the textual information on the Phoenix criminal justice record service.

Operational trials have shown that photographs which have been coded by reference to physical features can be retrieved during the interview of a witness significantly more successfully than uncoded photographs. But manual coding is a very labour intensive process and my Department is therefore investigating automatic coding methods. It is also working with facial identification practitioners to establish standards for the analysis and presentation of facial identification evidence to the courts. These standards may eventually be embodied in a computer system.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a table showing (a) the rate of conviction and (b) the average sentences for cases heard by (i) Tameside South magistrates court and (ii) Ashton-under-Lyme magistrates court in relation to (i) all crimes of theft, (ii) all juvenile crimes and (iii) crimes of theft committed by juveniles, for each of the last five years.

Mr. Maclean: The 1989 to 1993 information is given in the table.

Violent Crime

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will commission research to investigate the effect of violent crime on victims and their families, assess the extent to which families suffer post-traumatic stress and identify the support which should be provided to such families.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Research of the kind proposed already exists. I have arranged for a copy of Home Office Research and Planning Unit Paper 80, "The long-term needs of victims: A review of the literature", to be placed in the Library of the House.

Special Constables

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many ex-gratia payments were made in each of the last three years to date to special constables or their dependents for being killed or injured on duty; which police authorities recommended ex-gratia payments be made; and what payment was made in each case.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 November 1994]: This information is not readily available and comprehensive figures could be provided only at disproportionate cost. As a policy, all reasonable recommendations are approved. The records available show that three payments were approved in the last year. The largest was for £2,439 to a special constable in Hampshire.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress his officials have made in amending current regulations to enable police authorities to provide non-contributory insurance cover for special constables who are injured or killed in the course of their duties; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Adequate arrangements exist under regulations to cover any special constable killed or permanently disabled in the course of his or her duties. As far as injury or illness are concerned, the majority of specials are adequately provided for under the regulations and police authorities are free to recommend an ex-gratia payment in any case in which they consider the regulatory cover to be inadequate. But I have asked officials to review the current regulations to identify ways in which they might sensibly be improved. These may include the provision of personal accident insurance cover.

Non-payment of Debts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what indication he has of the number of people imprisoned over the last year for (a) non-payment of debt and (b) non-payment of court fines; what is the trend over recent years in respect of (i) the numbers in each category and (ii) the length of prison sentences for the people in both categories; what is the average cost of keeping an individual in prison; what are the average debts and fines over which the person was imprisoned; and what proposals he has to end or reduce terms of imprisonment for those involved in relatively small cases of debt or fine.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Provisional information shows that some 23,000 persons were received into Prison Service establishments in England and Wales for fine default in 1993 and about 17,500 between January and September 1994. A total of 2,020 persons were received for non-payment of debt in 1993 and about 1,330 between January and September 1994. Information for the previous 10 years was published in "Prison Statistics, England and Wales, 1992", tables 6.3 and 7.1 Cm 2581, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. Information for 1982–92 on the length of time served by fine defaulters and debtors is also published in "Prison Statistics", tables 6.5 and 7.1. The average net operating cost per prisoner per week is published in the "Prison Service Annual Report and Accounts, April 1992–March 1993", table D, volume 2, Cm 2385, and was £494 at 1992–93 prices.

The Government believe that wherever possible fines should be enforced by the range of other measures available to the courts without recourse to imprisonment. They have no plans at present, however, to remove imprisonment as final sanction for offenders who have failed to respond to other methods of enforcement.

Obscene Publications Branch

Mr. Alison: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what level of financial and manpower resources is envisaged for the obscene publications branch —SO1 (4)—for the year 1995 following recent changes within the Metropolitan police; and what has been the comparable level of such resources allocated for 1994, 1993, 1992 and 1991.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 22 November 1994]: Staffing levels for the obscene publication branch in 1995–96 are still under consideration. Manpower levels and costs for the financial years 1991–92, 1992–93, 1993–94 and current 1994–95 levels are as follows:

Police	Civil staff

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Nuclear Power Stations

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what assessment he has made of which method of decommissioning nuclear power stations is most compatible with the principle of sustainable development as defined at the Rio earth summit agreement;

(2) what assessment he has made of whether a method of decommissioning nuclear power stations exists which is compatible with the principle of sustainable development.

Mr. Eggar: The consultation document, "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", published by the Department of the Environment in August, considered a variety of decommissioning strategies. Responses are being considered and a statement will be made in due course.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which body manages the Windscale advanced gas-cooled reactor decommissioning project; and what are his plans for the future management of the project.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Decommissioning of the Windscale advanced gas-cooled reactor—WAGR—is part of the decommissioning and radioactive waste management operations programme which is managed by the DRAWMOPS directorate within the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority Government division. The DRAWMOPS directorate has recently awarded a management contract for the next phase of WAGR decommissioning to AEA Technology following a competitive tender exercise. This contract is to manage the decommissioning through to the removal of all main components including the four heat exchangers and reactor internals which is expected to take five and a half years.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the criteria which will be used to determine the method of decommissioning nuclear power stations in future.

Mr. Eggar: Detailed proposals for the decommissioning of nuclear power stations will be the subject of agreement between the operator and the regulatory authorities at the appropriate time.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if Her Majesty's Government will underwrite the costs of decommissioning nuclear power stations if it proves to be prohibitive for private finances.

Mr. Eggar: Schedule 12 to the Electricity Act 1989 provides power to make grants to operators, subject to certain limits, in respect of qualifying expenditure, which may include the costs of decommissioning nuclear power stations.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will introduce legislation to make it a criminal offence to change the electronic identity of a mobile telephone; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department, with the Home Office and Oftel, have been discussing with the mobile phone industry what steps can be taken to tackle the problem of mobile phone theft. In particular, the industry is considering improved control of electronic serial numbers and equipment marking schemes. The Federation of Communication Services has proposed the introduction of a new criminal offence of reprogramming a mobile phone. Discussions are continuing with the industry about whether any new offence along these lines would be at all effective in reducing the problem of mobile phone thefts, and whether such an offence could be compatible with protection of the legitimate interests of mobile phone users and others.

Significant offences already exist under the Theft Acts 1968 and 1978 covering the theft and handling of mobile phones and section 42 of the Telecommunications Act 1984 covering the fraudulent use of telecommunications equipment.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what percentage of the land area of the United Kingdom can be reached by mobile phones.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Mobile phone services are currently available in an area where over 98 per cent. of the United Kingdom population live, well in excess of the figure of 90 per cent. of the United Kingdom population required by the licences issued to the mobile telecommunications operators under the Telecommunications Act 1984. The Department of Trade and Industry does not hold figures on the percentage of land area of the United kingdom which can be reached by mobile phones.

Exports

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many licences under the Export of Goods (Control) Order were (a) applied for and (b) issued in 1992 and in 1993, stating in each case how many were for sole use military equipment.

Mr. Ian Taylor: This question could be answered only at disproportionate cost. There will, however, be some details of licences issued and refused during the years in question in the annual report of the Export Control Organisation to be published shortly. A copy of that report will be placed in the Library of the House and I will also arrange for the hon. Member to receive a personal copy.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list the outstanding amount on export credits guarantees on arms deals between United Kingdom companies and (a) Nigeria, (b) Indonesia, (c) Malaysia, (d) Saudi Arabia, (e) Jordan, (f) Qatar, (g) the United Arab Emirates, (h) Oman and (i) Turkey.

Mr. Needham [holding answer 24 November 1994]: ECGD has no business requirement to analyse amounts outstanding in terms of arms or other trade sectors. Consequently the Exports Credits Guarantee Department data on amounts outstanding in these markets are not held on a basis which enables me to provide the information requested.

Saudi Arabia

Mr. Cohen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list all the companies represented in the trade mission of November 1994 to Saudi Arabia; and what is his Department's role in respect to this mission.

Mr. Needham: Due to commercial confidentiality I am unable to list the companies involved in the mission organised by British Aerospace. It involved some 50 companies mainly drawn from the engineering and food processing sectors.

My Department's involvement in this mission was in an advisory capacity, due to our involvement in the joint offset committee which aims to encourage companies to set up manufacturing joint ventures in Saudi Arabia to help the kingdom diversify its economy.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to the oral answer of the Minister of Defence Procurement on 22 November Official Report, column 461, when Her Majesty's Government intend to ratify the chemical weapons convention.

Mr. Heseltine: The Government intend to ratify the chemical weapons convention as soon as possible. The necessary implementing legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and other Government legislative priorities permit.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) if the chemical weapons convention will be ratified in the current parliamentary Session;

(2) what are the reasons for the delay between the signing of the chemical weapons convention and its ratification.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Government intend to ratify the chemical weapons convention as soon as possible. The necessary implementing legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and other Government legislative priorities permit.

Gas and Electricity Companies

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what powers the Government have to regulate the call-out charges levied by the privatised gas and electricity companies.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Call-out charges levied by electricity companies for work on equipment and wiring belonging to the customer, and British Gas call-out charges in respect of appliance servicing and repair, are subject to competitive pricing by other service providers and are not regulated.

There is generally no call-out charge by British Gas to make safe escapes of gas.

Unemployment

Mrs. Lait: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what progress is being made in reducing unemployment in south-east England, particularly in the new assisted areas; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Eggar: The level of unemployment in the south east, excluding London, has shown a welcome fall from a high point of 9.7 per cent. in January 1993 to its current level of 7.1 per cent. Unemployment within the assisted areas has also fallen as shown in the table.

	January 1991	January 1992	January 1993	January 1994	[2]October 1994

High-technology Enterprises

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to promote further regional distribution of high-technology enterprises; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Regional policy seeks to address disparities in employment opportunities and to develop the indigenous potential of the assisted areas, including their ability to attract high technology investment. But investment decisions by high technology and other firms must remain, in general, matters for commercial judgment. The Government do provide advice to companies on technological developments through business link offices.

National Consumer Council

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what the level of funding for the National Consumer Council was in (a) 1991, (b) 1992, (c) 1993 and (d) 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The grant-in-aid paid to the National Consumer Council[1] for each year since 1990–91 was:

1990–91: £1,606,650
1991–92: £1,895,609
1992–93: £2,138,978
1993–94: £2,322,686

Final figures for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the average and the median time his Department has taken to pay suppliers in each of the last 12 months; and what proportion of bills it took more than six weeks to pay.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information requested is not available. However, my Department conducts an annual survey of the proportion of its bills paid on time which is defined as within 30 days—or another period if agreed with the supplier—of receipt of both a valid invoice and the goods or services. The result is published in the annual Trade and Industry expenditure plans which is available in the Library of the House.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) what are his reasons for reopening consideration of the proposed takeover of T. Bailey Forman Ltd. following the Monopolies and Mergers Commission's report of October 1994;

(2) on how many occasions in the last five years companies have been allowed to make representations for reconsideration of a recommendation following a report on a takeover proposal from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission.

Mr. Eggar: It is the role of the Monopolies and Mergers Commission to provide advice to Ministers on the proposed transfer of newspaper titles. The final decision as to whether to give consent to such transfers is for Ministers to make.

In publishing the MMC report on the proposed transfer of the newspaper titles of T. Bailey Forman on 31 October I announced that I accepted the MMC adverse findings and that I would refuse consent unless satisfactory conditions could be agreed by 5 December. I invited third party comments on such conditions by 21 November.

The last time that Ministers consulted interested parties about conditions to attach consent to a newspaper transfer was in February 1989 following the MMC report on the proposed acquisition by EMAP plc of shares in TR Beckett Ltd.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on how many occasions in the past five years unanimous recommendations on takeover proposals from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission have been subsequently overturned.

Mr. Eggar: None.

"Marketing Your Business"

Mr. Wilson: To ask the President of the Board of Trade which consultants were appointed to assist in production of the booklet "Marketing Your Business"; how much was paid to them; what was the remit given to them; and by what process they were appointed.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Business skills seminar workbooks including "Marketing Your Business" were originally written in 1988 by a group of experienced training providers on behalf of the Training Agency. Their remit was to produce a series of workbooks for use and reference by owner managers of new and small businesses. I understand that they were appointed on recommendation of Training Agency area offices.

This book was one of a series of books written by a number of people. It is not possible to identify the separate cost of writing this particular book.

Exports

Mr. Jenkin: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will produce a table to show what proportion of United Kingdom exports, including services and invisibles, was exported to the rest of the EC single market in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The information is provided in the table.

Business Links

Mr. Mudie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many business links are currently in full operation.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 28 November 1994]: There are now 52 business links fully operational. By the end of the year this will raise to over 60 and by the end of next year I expect there to be 200, covering all parts of England.

Open Government

Mr. Rooker: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the charging policy of his Department and the agencies for which he is responsible in respect of inquiries under the code of practice on access to Government.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 22 November 1994]: In line with guidance on charging policy produced by the Office of Public Services and Science, which recognised the diversity of cost and operational structure across the range of bodies implementing the code, my Department has developed the following scheme of charges for information under the code of practice on access to government information. The Department has always provided much information free of charge. When requests for information under the code can be dealt with simply and quickly the Department makes no charge. Only when a significant diversion of resource is required will a charge be made in line with the amount of work involved in extracting and preparing the information to answer the request.

Charges are based on a two-tier composite hourly rate according to the grade of person performing the work. For SEO and below the rate is £14 per hour, and for grade 7 and above the rate is £34 per hour. There is no charge if the information can be supplied for a forecast amount of less than £100. If the estimated amount is more than £1,000 the charge will be calculated on a grade-by-grade basis of the average pay cost for that grade together with direct costs such as photocopying.

I have asked each of the agency chief executives to write to the hon. Member about their schemes of charges.

Letter from Mike Hoddinott to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

Your recent Parliamentary Question to the President of the Board of Trade asked for a statement on charging policy in respect of inquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government. Each agency chief executive has been asked to reply.

The charging policy of Accounts Services Agency follows that for the Department.

Letter from David Durham to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

You recently tabled the following Parliamentary Question to which I have been asked to respond direct to you as Chief Executive of Companies House Executive Agency.

To ask the President of the Board of Trade, if he will make a statement on the charging policy of his Department and the agencies for which he is responsible in respect of inquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government.

Companies House is a public registry, and most information on companies is charged for under Companies Act powers, based on the full economic cost of providing it.

Where requests are received involving the Code, our policy is to make a flat charge of £5 to cover administrative cost. If the work involved in satisfying the request is likely to take more than half a day of staff time, our policy is to give a quote for the full cost and obtain agreement to this before undertaking the work.

To date, no requests involving the Code have been received.

Letter from Peter Joyce to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

You asked the President of the Board of Trade to make a statement on the charging policy of his Department and the agencies for which he is responsible in respect of inquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I am replying on behalf of The Insolvency Service.

The Service has developed its charging policy in accordance with guidance produced by the Office of Public Services and Science. To cover the costs of dealing with applications, there is a standard minimum charge of £20 for each access request under the Code. Where dealing with a request would involve considerable expenditure of resources and the estimated costs of supplying the information would exceed £100, an additional charge will be made based on the hourly rates of the grades carrying out the work. For insolvency specialist grades, these hourly rates are set out in the Insolvency Regulations 1994 and begin at £26 an hour for an examiner grade, rising to £49 an hour for an official receiver.

The Service will however advise applicants where the information sought is already provided in the normal course of its activities without charge or is known to be available free of charge elsewhere, so that the applicant will not incur costs unnecessarily through the formal operation of the Code.

The Service also publishes information guides for the public which are available free of charge.

Letter from R. D. Worswick to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

Mr. Taylor's answer to your Parliamentary Question on the charging policy of the Department of Trade and Industry and its Agencies in respect of enquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government indicated that Chief Executives of Agencies would write to you.

In the case of the Laboratory of the Government Chemist, we are following the Department's charging policy, as described in Mr. Taylor's response. Since the introduction of the Code in April 1994 we have adopted the two tier composite hourly charging regime at the rates determined by DTI as a whole: £14 for a senior scientific officer (equivalent to a senior executive officer) or below; and £34 for Grade 7 and above. As for the Department, there is no charge if the information can be supplied for a forecast amount of less than £100; and if the estimated amount is more than £1000 the charge will be calculated on a grade by grade basis of the average pay cost for that grade (or equivalent) together with any direct costs.

Letter from W. Edgar to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

I would refer to your question to the President of the Board of Trade in respect of the charging policy for enquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government. As an Executive Agency of the DTI involved in the supply of technology services to the public and private sector our charges are dictated by the market place for our services and the level of the competition which we face. We operate in competition with both the public and private sectors for the majority of our services and therefore all of our charging is market driven.

Letter from Peter Clapham to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

I am writing in response to your question to the President of the Board of Trade regarding the charging policy of the DTI and its Agencies in respect of inquiries under the Code of Practice to Access to Government Information.

The National Physical Laboratory makes no charge for providing small quantities of information which are readily available. Where a significant amount of effort is involved, the full economic cost of the work is charged.

I hope this provides the information you require.

Letter from Jon Cowdock to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

Charges for information supplied under the Code of Practice on Open Government

I have been asked to reply, in the absence of the Agency's Chief Executive, on behalf of the National Weights and Measures Laboratory to your question concerning charges for open government.

The National Weights and Measures Laboratory applies the same charging policy as DTI. Details of that policy are set out in the reply given by Mr Taylor on 22 November.

Letter from P.R.S. Hartnack to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

Code of Practice on Access to Government Information

You asked the President of the Board of Trade to make a statement on charging policy for inquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I have been asked to reply in relation to the Patent Office.

The Patent Office provides a great deal of information to the public. This includes explanatory literature, which is free; publications for sale at various prices; information supplied in accordance with statutory requirements and on payment of the relevant fee; and consultancy services, for which charges are made on the basis of database access, document supply and hourly rates. None of these activities is affected by the Code of Practice.

In line with guidance on charging policy produced by the Office of Public Services and Science, which recognised the diversity of cost and operational structure across the range of bodies implementing the Code, the Patent Office has adopted the following scheme of charges. Where an inquirer can be directed to a published document, or free literature is available, there will be no charge. Inquiries requiring further work will be charged according to hourly rates based on the average pay costs of the grades involved, together with any direct costs incurred. However, where the total cost is less than £30, no charge will be made.

Letter from Jim Norton to Mr. Jeff Rooker, dated 29 November 1994:

Code of Practice on Access to Government Information—Charging Policy

The President of the Board of Trade has asked Chief Executive of DTI Agencies to reply direct to your parliamentary question about our charging policy in respect of enquiries under the Code of Practice on Access to Government Information. I am replying in respect of the Radiocommunications Agency of the DTI.

As a net running cost Agency we are wholly funded by licence fees and other charges paid by our customers. Because of this funding regime we have adopted a slightly different charging policy to that of our parent department. We have set a basic "registration" fee of £15 (this is equivalent to the minimum licence fee we charge and will be linked to that level in future) for all requests for information invoked under the Code, ie outside our existing information flow procedures. This registration fee would cover all cases costing up to £100 to deal with. However, for more detailed cases when estimated costs of providing the information exceed the £100 level, we will use the Departmental composite hourly rates—but the initial £15 fee would be used as a deposit, deductible against any higher charge imposed. For cases estimated to cost over £1,000 we will also follow DTI central policy.

Electricity

Mr. Hardy: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the price of electricity paid by 80MW consumers in each EC member state; and by how much these prices have increased since 1987.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The average price of electricity paid by consumers of 80MW capacity, with an 86 per cent. load factor, in each EC member state for October 1994, and the increase since October 1987, are given in the table.

Country	Price pence per kWh	Percentage increase
United Kingdom	3.40	[1]37.7
Belgium	3.13	21.3
France	3.20	33.9
Germany	4.58	15.1
Italy	3.24	54.3
Netherlands	3.20	24.5
Spain	4.43	[2]—

[1] For the United Kingdom there is a decrease of about 2 per cent. when the effect of inflation, as measured by the GDP deflator, is excluded.

[2] Data for Spain are not available for October 1987.

Data for Denmark, Greece, Ireland, Portugal and Luxembourg, are not available.

Retail Sales Statistics

Mr. Sainsbury: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what evidence he has that seasonal adjustment for retail sales statistics gives a more reliable indication of activity than comparisons with a similar period of the previous year.

Mr. Nelson: I have been asked to reply. Both measures are useful. Seasonal adjustment of retail sales statistics, whilst difficult, allows a sensible comparison of activity in the trade across months. Without adjustment, comparisons even with a similar period of the previous year can be distorted by moving holidays such as Easter and comparisons within a year are not possible.

Population Control

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information his Department has on the reasons for the prevalence of sterilisation as a method of contraception in the developing world; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 28 November, Official Report, column 198.

World Bank

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will introduce legislation prohibiting the United Kingdom executive director at the World bank from approving projects which do not have demonstrable local consultation and environmental assessment.

Mr. Baldry: The bank's operational guidelines require adequate local consultation and environmental assessment in project design. Where we are not satisfied that these requirements have been fulfilled, we are ready to withhold approval.

Overseas Aid

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those countries which have received advice and assistance on privatisation, contracting out and civil service and local government reform as part of the overseas aid programme in each year since 1989 and the cost in each case.

Mr. Baldry: Countries receiving advice and assistance from the aid programme since 1989 on privatisation, contracting out of civil service or local government reform include:-

Albania
Anguilla
Bangladesh
Bulgaria
Cameroon
China
Colombia
Czech Republic
Dependent Territories: Montserrat; and Turks and Caicos Islands
Ecuador
Egypt
Estonia
Gambia
Ghana
Grenada
Guyana
Hungary
India
Indonesia
Kenya
Kirgistan
Latvia
Mexico
Nepal
Nigeria
Poland
Romania
Russia
Sierra Leone
Slovakia
Slovenia
Uganda
Ukraine
Zambia

Information by year showing the cost in each case is not centrally recorded and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

EU Aid

Sir John Stanley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the European Union overseas aid schemes and European Union overseas aid budget headings under which United Kingdom governmental and non-governmental organisations can apply for European Union overseas aid funds, and the amount of European Union funding given to United Kingdom organisations under each European Union overseas aid scheme and under each European Union overseas aid budget heading in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Baldry: The main EC aid instruments, in all of which United Kingdom governmental and non-governmental organisations can participate, are as follows:

The Lomé Convention for African, Caribbean and Pacific countries;

The Asia and Latin America Programme;

The New Mediterranean Policy;

Phare (for eastern and central Europe);

Tacis (for the former Soviet Union);

The EC Food Aid Programme; and,

The EC Humanitarian Aid Programme.

My right hon. and noble Friend the Minister for Overseas Development will write to my hon. Friend once the data requested on funding for United Kingdom organisations have been prepared.

China

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what statistics his Department has received published by the Chinese Government on contraceptive use; and if he will place copies in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: Statistics about contraceptive use are published in the "Family Planning Statistical Yearbook", produced annually by the Chinese Government. The most recently available yearbook was published in 1993. We will arrange for copies of this to be placed in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the International Planned Parenthood Federation has made a report separate from its annual report, to his Department, regarding the work of its affiliate the Chinese Family Planning Association in monitoring human rights abuses in China's population control programme; and if he will place a copy of the report in the Library.

Mr. Baldry: We have a continuing dialogue with the International Planned Parenthood Federation on a range of issues, including China's population policy. Such discussions and any information shared are on the understanding that they remain confidential to the IPPF and Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what matters were discussed between representatives from his Department and representatives of the Chinese Government at the Cairo population conference.

Mr. Baldry: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 28 November, Official Report, column 198.

Kenya

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what are the present projects in Kenya being funded in full or in part by aid from the United Kingdom.

Mr. Baldry: Projects supported by United Kingdom aid funds in Kenya with an aid allocation of more than £500,000, and against which expenditure has already taken place, or will take place in the current financial year, are as follows:

	Aid allocation £ millions

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Sri Lanka

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions United Kingdom representatives in Sri Lanka have had with factions, ethnic groups, party and community leaders; what proposal he has to enable the United Kingdom to assist the peace process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: I visited Sri Lanka from 15 to 16 November. I met representatives of a wide range of Sri Lankan opinion. Her Majesty's high commission in Colombo also maintains contact with all legitimate political, trade union and human rights groups.

Our standing offer to help facilitate talks, if all parties would find it useful, remains on the table.

Bosnia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment United Nations observers monitoring the border between the Republics of Serbia and Montenegro and Bosnia-Herzegovina have made as to whether the flow of supplies across that border has been limited in accordance with United Nations resolutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The latest report of the international conference on the former Yugoslavia—ICFY—mission concludes that the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia—FRY—Government are continuing to meet their commitment to close the border between the FRY and the areas of the Republic of Bosnia and Herzegovina under the control of Bosnian Serb forces.

It is essential that the ICFY mission should be equipped to monitor the border closure effectively. Ten United Kingdom observers have been serving with the ICFY mission since it began work in September 1994. In response to an appeal from the ICFY Secretariat for additional help, we have decided to contribute a further ten observers and to provide five four-wheel-drive vehicles. This makes the United Kingdom the second largest contributor.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations have been made to the Bosnian Government in respect of the recent use of Bihac and other demilitarised zones in Bosnia-Herzegovina to launch their military attacks; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have urged all parties, including the Bosnian Government, to refrain from fighting in and from the United Nation designated safe areas and weapons exclusion zones.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports have been received by his Department of breaches in the arms embargo in favour of Bosnian-Muslim and Bosnian-Croat forces in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are aware of reports, both from the media and other sources, of breaches of the United Nations arms embargo. Evidence of such breaches is taken up with the United Nations Sanctions Committee and the country concerned.

Yugoslavia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures are being considered to encourage the Governments of Serbia, Montenegro and the Federal Yugoslav Government to continue to co-operate with the international community in implementing United Nations and Security Council resolutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The United Nations Security Council decided in its resolution 943 to suspend the ban on international air links, a ferry crossing to Italy and cultural and sporting contacts in response to a decision by Belgrade to support the contact group plan for Bosnia, to cut off all but humanitarian supplies to the Bosnian Serbs and to co-operate with a mission from the international conference on former Yugoslavia.

Further sanctions relief is envisaged if the contact group plan for Bosnia is implemented. The contact group would also respond positively if Belgrade took other steps towards peace, such as support for a peace plan for Croatia and recognition of the other states of former Yugoslavia.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Croatian Government regarding the need to comply with United Nations resolutions on the importation of arms into the former Yugoslavia; what actions Her Majesty's Government propose to take in the event of evidence of Croatian non-compliance; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Croatian and other Governments have been made aware of our strong views on the need for all member states to comply with United Nations Security Council resolutions. Evidence of non-compliance with United Nations sanctions is taken up with the Government concerned and with the United Nations sanctions committee.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what controls are in place at airports in the Republic of Croatia to ensure that arms shipments, in breach of United Nations resolutions, are not being transported through Croatia to combatants in Bosnia-Herzegovina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: As in other countries of former Yugoslavia and in neighbouring countries, the United Nations have established, under EU/CSCE auspices, a sanctions assistance mission in Croatia, based in Zagreb. This mission has authority to observe and report back its findings to the United Nations sanctions committee.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received reports indicating that the Russian Federation is considering unilaterally abandoning trade sanctions against the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia at the beginning of 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We have received no reports of this nature. The Russian Government continue to be actively involved in the efforts of the contact group to achieve a peaceful settlement in Bosnia.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth affairs what restrictions are in place on the transport and telecommunications industry with regard to the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Since April 1993 transportation owned by or operated from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia has been subject to impoundment by member states under United Nations Security Council resolution 820. In September this year, some restrictions were suspended for an initial 100 days. Aircraft and civilian flights can operate to and from Belgrade airport, as can the passenger ferry service between Bar in the FRY and Bari in Italy.

Telecommunications are exempt from United Nations sanctions imposition. The only restriction, under UNSCR 820, is that the supply of goods to the FRY, relating to the industry, are subject to UNSC authorisation on a case-by-case basis.

Mr. Wareing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs under which United Nations Security Council resolution airlines may engage in commercial activity with the former Yugoslavia; what restrictions remain with regard to their (a) marketing, (b) technical services and (c) financial transactions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: United Nations Security Council resolution 943 permits civilian passenger flights to and from Belgrade airport carrying passengers and personal effects only and cargo authorised by the United Nations Sanctions Committee.

Technical and marketing services may be provided in respect of such flights; no licence from the DTI or authorisation from the United Nations is required.

The United Nations Sanctions Committee is in the process of finalising guidelines relating to financial transactions. Payments will be permitted from funds credited to blocked accounts on or after 5 October 1994 in order to pay the direct expenses incurred by JAT in operating passenger flights in and out of Belgrade airport.

United Nations Resolutions

Mr. Elletson : To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions Her Majesty's Government have had with the Government of the Russian Federation following the recent decision by the United States Administration on non-participation on the enforcement of United Nations resolutions; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We are in regular contact with Russia on the situation in former Yugoslavia, and are aware of Russian views on US policy, but we have held no discussions specifically on this subject.

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what proposals he has for a relaxation on the restriction of exports from the republics of Serbia and Montenegro whilst the Governments of the two republics continue to co-operate and assist the implementation of United Nations resolutions concerned with the war in the former Yugoslavia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Any relaxation on the restriction of exports from the Federal Republic of Yugoslavia—Serbia and Montenegro—must be agreed by the United Nations Security Council and not just the United Kingdom. It will be considered within the wider context of the sanctions regime as a whole.

We believe that further steps by the FRY authorities to comply with the requirements of the international community should be rewarded with the further relaxation of sanctions.

Sudan

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what response the European Union has received from the Government of Sudan to the European Union's criticism of Sudan's treatment of the inhabitants of squatter camps on the outskirts of Khartoum.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: The Sudanese Government have officially rejected the EU statement released on 31 October and questioned its factual basis. This statement condemned the use of violence by the Sudanese authorities in ejecting residents from a Khartoum squatter camp, during which at least five residents died and 14 were severely injured.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what reports he has received of large-scale troop movements in the Nuba mountains area of Sudan.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: With the ending of the rainy season, fighting is beginning to intensify in southern Sudan and the Nuba mountains area.

Departmental Security

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs who has been awarded the contract for the supply of security services at his Department's buildings.

Mr. Goodlad: The contract for guarding FCO buildings in London has been awarded to the Security Facilities Executive, an agency of the Department of the Environment.

Dependent Territories

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he proposes to take to ensure that the United Kingdom complies with the recent United Nations declaration that all existing dependent territories be decolonised by the year 2000; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: None. We respect the wishes and interests of the peoples of the dependent territories in determining their own future, in accordance with the United Nations charter and international law. We give every assistance to those dependent territories which are able to proceed to independence without forcing it on those which are not.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what plans he has to provide information via the Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer the hon. Member to the reply on this issue by my hon. Friend the Member for Morecambe and Lunesdale (Sir M. Lennox-Boyd) on 6 May 1994 at column 677. The FCO welcomes the recent moves by Her Majesty's Treasury and CCTA in establishing a Government presence on the Internet. Active consideration, in discussion with the CCTA, has and continues to be given to making FCO information available over the Internet.

Serbia

Mr. Rathbone: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of the embargo on trade with Serbia along the Danube; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On the whole, the operation is effective. Co-operation from the four national Customs services involved—Ukraine, Bulgaria, Romania and Hungary is good. The only persistent difficulty is the control, at certain points on the river, of the cross-bank trade by small boats.

Intergovernmental Conference

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to place in the Library the background papers, including public documents from foreign countries received and collated by the European Union intergovernmental conference unit in the Foreign Office, as and when these papers are received.

Mr. David Davis: We will ensure that Parliament receives copies of the relevant papers submitted to the study group of the 1996 intergovernmental conference by the Community institutions. We will also place in the Library important public documents relating to the IGC, including those from other member states. Ministers will in any case provide Parliament with regular accounts of the preparations for the IGC in the course of normal parliamentary business.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which cabinet Committees, official's committees and consortia with outside interests and how many civil servants are working on preparations and proposals for the 1996 intergovernmental conference arising from the Maastricht treaty.

Mr. David Davis: Ministers and officials in various Governmental Departments have already begun preparations for the 1996 intergovernmental conference. As work proceeds, it will be co-ordinated by the ministerial committee on defence and overseas policy, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister, and by the ministerial sub-committee on european questions, chaired by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs. The views of outside bodies will be taken into account in these preparations.

Israel

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make representations to the Israeli Government urging them to release Mordechai Vanunu; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: Mr. Vanunu appears to have been treated in accordance with the normal judicial process in Israel. There is no evidence of any illegality in the United Kingdom and we have no formal standing to intervene. We have, however, raised with the Israelis our concerns over humanitarian aspects of this case. The Israelis assured us in 1993 that the conditions under which Mr. Vanunu is detained have improved.

OECD

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he plans to end the United Kingdom's involvement with the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: No.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Baldry: Foreign and Commonwealth Office Ministers expect to send 2,078 Christmas cards this year at a purchase price of £679.95. Postage and staff costs are not available. A sample copy of the card that my right hon. Friend the Foreign Secretary will be sending has been placed in the Library.

EC Membership

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will issue a White Paper setting out in detail the gains and losses to Britain from EEC membership.

Mr. Goodlad: I refer to the replies my right hon. Friend the Economic Secretary gave on 17 March at column 821 and on 30 June at column 680, the reply my right hon. Friend the Prime Minister gave on 18 May at column 470 and the reply given by my hon. Friend the Paymaster General on 25 November, at column 468 in answer to very similar questions from the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell).

Transsexuals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many cases concerning the rights of British transsexuals are currently being considered by the European Court of Human Rights; what is the estimated cost of defending those cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: There are not, at present, any cases involving the rights of any British transsexuals before the European Court of Human Rights. There are, however, three cases before the European Commission of Human Rights.

As two of the cases are in the very early stages and the third, although at a more advanced stage, is not yet concluded, it is not possible to provide a reliable estimate of the likely total cost which will be incurred by the Government in relation to these cases.

European Directives

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all existing or draft European directives which make reference to the concept of "industrially produced" or similar terms.

Mr. David Davis: Council directive 89/341/EEC of 3 May 1989—amending directives 65/65/EEC, 75/318/EEC and 75/319/EEC—on the approximation of provisions laid down by law, regulation or administrative action relating to proprietary medicinal products, and Council directive 85/374/EEC of 25 July 1985 on the approximation of laws, regulations and administrative provisions of the member states concerning liability for defective products both refer to the term "industrially produced". It is not sufficiently clear what is meant by "similar terms" for this part of the question to be answered.

Rwanda and Burundi

Mrs Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent representations he has received on the situation in (a) Rwanda and (b) Burundi; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We share the concerns that have been widely expressed about the problems of Rwanda including the difficulties created by the presence of large numbers of refugees in neighbouring countries. We are also aware of the fragility of the situation in Burundi.

We are working closely with our partners in the United Nations and EU and with the OAU in the search for effective solutions to the problems of the region. With United Kingdom support, the EU last week agreed a package of 67 million ecu—about £52 million—of rehabilitation assistance to Rwanda in key sectors, including technical support to the Government of Rwanda to begin the process of reconstruction.

Gibraltar

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on his country's exclusion from the United Kingdom regulations on mortgage indemnity insurance captives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: The question of building societies being allowed to set up captive insurance companies in Gibraltar, to write mortgage indemnity business, was discussed when the Chancellor met the Chief Minister on 17 February.

They have since corresponded on the issue. My right hon. and Learned Friend will consider the matter further when the provisions of the amended Financial Services Commission Ordinance are fully in operation.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Pregnant Service Women

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Attorney-General when he gave advice to the Ministry of Defence with regard to the legality of its policy regarding the dismissal of pregnant service women.

The Attorney-General: By convention, the law officers do not normally disclose whether they have been asked to advise on a particular issue or the substance of any advice that they may have given.

LORD PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL

Christmas Expenses

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Lord President of the Council how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. Newton: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. The costs are covered by the entertainment expenditure of the Privy Council Office which, for the financial year ended April 1994, was £9,892. I am not responsible for any agencies.

HEALTH

Health Care in London (Leaflet)

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who is distributing the leaflet "Changing the Focus of Health Care in London".

Mr. Malone: The Department of Health distributed the booklet to national health service organisations and local authorities in inner London for them to make it available to patients and members of the public visiting hospitals, clinics, surgeries, libraries, neighbourhood resource centres and so on.

Community Health Councils

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to allow complaints in the national health service to be monitored by community health councils; and if she will increase the resources of community health councils accordingly.

Mr. Malone: Community health councils already have an important role in supporting individual complainants. In partnership with national health service trusts and/or health authorities they are also able to monitor complaints more generally. The Government do not, therefore, believe that legislation is needed in this area.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will alter the regulations governing community health councils to allow full membership to people over 70 years of age; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The Community Health Council Regulations 1985, as amended, do not contain any restriction on the age of members of community health councils.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will extend the statutory powers of community health councils and district advisory committees to give them the right to enter (a) nursing and residential homes and (b) general practitioner premises; if she will make it her policy to require home managers and general practitioners to give community health councils information about the services they offer to patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: It would not be appropriate to give community health councils power to enter residential care homes, which are already subject to statutory inspection by local authorities. Commissioning health bodies have responsibility for arranging visiting and inspection arrangements for CHCs in the course of negotiating contracts with private nursing homes. CHCs locally have the opportunity to develop constructive working relationships with general practitioners which might include visits to premises.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to ensure that community health councils (a) are consulted at the earliest possible stage in the process of establishing a new community care trust home and (b) have the right to access to community care trust homes subject to the agreement of residents or their guardians in line with the current statutory rights of access to national health service premises; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: District health authorities have a statutory duty to consult community health councils on any proposals for substantial changes and developments of service. CHCs already have a statutory right to inspect premises controlled by national health service trusts.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to ensure that community health councils have the right to (a) meet regularly with (i) trust boards, (ii) health authorities and (iii) local and regional offices of the national health service Executive and (b) visit all activities financed or licensed by the national health service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Community health councils already have the right to regular meetings with health authorities. It is for national health service commissioning bodies to include visiting and other rights for CHCs in contracts with those who provide services to the national health service. EL94(4), copies of which are available in the Library, makes clear that individual NHS trusts should agree regular liaison arrangements with CHCs. Subject to parliamentary approval of the Health Authorities Bill, responsibility for establishing and supporting CHCs will pass from regional health authorities to the regional offices of the NHS executive from April 1996. The Government do not consider that legislation is needed to supplement these comprehensive arrangements.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to increase public awareness of community health councils; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The national health service executive is working with the Association of Community Health Councils for England and Wales—ACHCEW—on a project for ACHCEW to develop a resource pack for community health councils to use to increase public awareness of their role and activities.

Quarry House, Leeds

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the amount of the severance pay being offered to staff currently facing redundancy at Quarry house, Leeds.

Mr. Sackville: The severance payments vary according to factors such as age, salary and length of service and are calculated on an individual basis. The ways in which the sums are calculated are set out in the civil service pension scheme booklet "Early Retirement Benefits", a copy of which is available in the Library. The terms which apply to this scheme are the same as for compulsory departures.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what reserve price she has put on Quarry house, Leeds.

Mr. Sackville: None.

London Implementation Zone

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many London households are in the London implementation zone area and how many outside.

Mr. Malone: The 1991 census results show that the number of Greater London households in the London initiative zone area is 1,712,051 and the number outside the London initiative zone is 1,051,115.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to extend the London implementation zone to the London borough of Redbridge.

Mr. Malone: None.

Respite Care

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidance to local authorities and health authorities to ensure adequate provision of respite care; if she will ensure that sufficient funding is available to enable health authorities and social services to make adequate provision; if she will monitor the adequacy of the provision; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: It is for health authorities and local authorities to decide locally the specific type and level of services to be provided. The Department continues to monitor the delivery by authorities of the new community care arrangements, including the development of domiciliary, day and respite services to enable more people to live in their own homes and to ensure that authorities make practical support for carers a high priority.

The total funding available to local authorities for personal social services, including the special transitional grant for community care, has increased by 15 per cent. this year on last, and since 1990–91 from £3.6 to £6.4 billion. Of this, £20 million represents additional resources this year specifically for home and respite care services—rising to £30 million in 1995–96.

Dental Fillings

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has conducted or commissioned concerning the effects of amalgam fillings on the human body; what have been the results or conclusions of such research; and what plans she has to commission or conduct such research in the future.

Mr. Malone: The Committee on Toxicity of Chemicals in Food, Consumer Products and the Environment advised in 1986 that the use of dental amalgam is free from the risk of systemic toxicity and that only a few cases of hypersensitivity occur. The subsequent research findings, and recent evaluations by several authoritative national and international expert committees are consistent with that advice. The Department of Health will continue to assess and evaluate all research in this area.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the average number of dental fillings in (a) 12-year-old children and (b) eight-year-old children in each district health authority in England.

Mr. Malone: The preliminary results of the 1993 children's dental health survey show that the average number of filled teeth in permanent dentition was 0.7 for a 12-year-old and 0.1 for an eight-year-old. Information from this survey is not published at district health authority level. However, the 1992–93 survey by the British Association for the Study of Community Dentistry of dental caries experience of 12-year-old children provides information on the number of filled teeth for 12-year-old children by district health authority. Copies of the results of the survey will be placed in the Library.

HIV and AIDS

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) which HIV and AIDS organisations were refused funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968 for the current financial year; the amount each organisation requested and the reasons given for refusal;

(2) which HIV and AIDS organisations have successfully applied for funding under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1986 for the current financial year; how much they requested; and how much they received.

Mr. Sackville: Applications for HIV and AIDS voluntary organisations exceeded the section 64 funding available for 1994–95 by over 100 per cent. Our priority was to continue grants to those organisations to whom financial commitments had already been made and renew funding to organisations whose funding was due to end after March 1994. No funding then remained to make any new grants. The information requested has been placed in the Library.

Specialist Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that NHS specialist services provided on a national basis are purchased by one authority for the whole of the United Kingdom; and that regionally based NHS specialist services are purchased by a small number of lead authorities on behalf of all other authorities within a region; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Services which meet the supra-regional services criteria are provided on a national basis and are contracted for by the national health service executive. Guidance has been issued to regions requiring them to ensure that purchasers have appropriate contracting arrangements in place for purchasing other specialised services. Purchasers are encouraged to use a "lead purchasing approach". Copies of the guidance, EL(93)98, are available in the Library.

Kawasaki Disease

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to reduce deaths from Kawasaki disease.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave her on 13 July at column 602.

Dental Health (Children)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will meet the editor of the Bolton Evening News to discuss the benefits to children's dental health of fluoridation of water.

Mr. Malone: We have received no such request, but would consider any proposal on its merits.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys report on the dental health of children will be available.

Mr. Malone: It is hoped that the report will be published shortly.

Macmillan Nurses

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many Macmillan hospital nurse posts within the NHS are currently being funded by the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not routinely collected by the Department. Data from the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund show that there are currently 239 national health service hospital nurse posts being funded by the charity. Macmillan nurse posts are usually grant-aided by the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund for the first three years, after which the costs are taken up by the NHS.

Single-sex Hospital Accommodation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that all NHS patients, with the exception of young children and patients in intensive care units, should be offered the choice of accommodation in a single-sex area with segregated toilets and bathroom facilities without delaying their treatment or otherwise reducing its quality; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for local decision, but we do expect all patients to be treated with dignity and respect for their religious and cultural beliefs. A new standard in the revised and expanded patients charter to be issued in the new year will expect patients to be told in advance if they are to be treated in mixed-sex wards. This will allow them to raise any objections with the hospital which will, where possible, take account of their views.

Hip Replacements

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people were on waiting lists for hip replacement surgery in each year from 1983 to 1993 in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Malone: Information on the number of people waiting for treatment in England is collected by specialty and published in "Hospital Waiting List Statistics: England", copies of which are available in the Library. Data on the number waiting by individual procedure are not available centrally.

Information relating to Wales and Scotland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland.

Junior Doctors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research her Department has carried out on the effect on the reduction of junior hospital doctors' hours on accessibility to patient services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: A number of research projects have been supported, fully or in part, by central funds. The main studies include:

Description and preliminary evaluation of Department of Health initiatives to reduce junior doctors' hours—Dr. Irene Higginson, health services research unit, London School of Hygiene and Tropical Medicine, 1992;

The interface between junior doctors and nurses: a research study for the Department of Health—Greenhalgh and Company, September 1994;

Medical support worker policy—Northern general hospital, Sheffield, on-going;

The patient's progress —Department of Health, on-going

Evaluation of processes for creating successful roles for nurse practitioners—Sheffield Centre for Health and Related Research, on-going;

Evaluation project on parasurgical assistants—University of Sheffield, Department of Surgical Sciences, on-going.

Much of the research in this area has concentrated on how best various disciplines can work together to deliver good quality patient care. The evidence suggests that an effective use of skill mix can help maintain continuity of care, improve services to patients, help reduce junior doctors' hours and provide a range of staff with opportunities to develop their skills further.

As well as projects supported directly by central funds, our regional task forces have been able to develop a range of local schemes to examine how best to reduce juniors' hours. They also evaluate the effect on patient care and juniors' hours of the extra senior medical posts, over 800 in all, which we have funded since 1991.

North Staffordshire Patient Transport Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will investigate the competition for the north Staffordshire patient transport service contract; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so.

Infertility Treatment

Mr. Wigley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she plans to publish the counselling guide on multiple pregnancies for patients attending infertility treatment centres; and if she will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Sackville: A guide for patients entitled "The Prospect of Triplets and Quads", written by Dr. Frances Price, was published in July 1993. Copies were sent to all assisted conception centres licensed under the Human Fertilisation and Embryology Act 1990.

Copies will be placed in the Library.

NHS Management Consultants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she plans to take to control the level of fees to management consultants paid by NHS trusts.

Mr. Malone: The employment of consultants is a matter for local rather than national decision. To assist health authorities and trusts to achieve best value for money, the Department published comprehensive guidance—EL(94)78—this on the use of consultants, entitled "The Procurement and Management of Consultants within the NHS". This guidance included an indication of the range of fee rates that might be reasonable depending on the skill levels required. Copies of guidance will be placed in the Library.

NHS Executive

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she expects to implement paragraphs 13 to 15 of the national health service executive letter EL (94) 4; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: All elements of executive letter EL(94)4 came into effect on 25 January 1994.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list all the current (a) chairs and (b) non-executive directors of each trust board, indicating the gender and occupation of each individual.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 24 October at column 445.

Mr. Denham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what estimate he has made of the total expenditure by NHS trusts on the insurance of buildings and equipment in each of the last four years.

Mr. Sackville: None.

Mr. Tim Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what guidance or instructions have been given to national health service trusts about the timely payment of suppliers' bills; and what evidence she has about the performance of national health service trusts in this regard.

Mr. Sackville: The national health service has been routinely monitored against a payment target of eight weeks from receipt of goods and services. Monitoring in the 1994–95 financial year shows that trusts are generally meeting this target.

New guidance was issued to the national health service in October 1994 on the timely payment of suppliers. The guidance includes the expectation that all trusts will abide by the Confederation of British Industry prompt payment code and with Government accounting regulations. A copy of the guidance, FDL(94)67, is available in the Library.

Prescription Charges

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will abolish all national health service prescription charges during the next financial year; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No.

GPs

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans he has to introduce mandatory training schemes for GP receptionists;

(2) what plans she has to allocate extra money to GPs in order to help fund the practice reception programme.

Mr. Malone: None.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will (a) increase the resources available to family health service authorities to ensure that more frequent inspections are carried out of general practitioner premises, (b) introduce measures to enforce standards and (c) ensure that public money spent by general practitioners is used for the maximum benefit of patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Under their terms of service, general practitioners are responsible for the provision of adequate practice premises from which to see their patients and it is for family health services authorities to decide the frequency of practice visits needed in the light of local circumstances. Minimum standards are set out in the statement of fees and allowances which are payable for premises and measures already exist to enforce them.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if general practitioners in the South Thames region will remain free to accept or reject secondary care contracts; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Health authority decisions about contracts should be reached in close co-operation with general practitioners. However, GPs remain free to refer their patients in line with their clinical judgment to a service or hospital with which the health authority has no contract.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy that general practitioners in the South Thames region will remain able to choose fundholding, locality purchasing or neither; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The recent executive letter "Developing NHS Purchasing and GP Fundholding"—EL(94)79—copies of which are available in the Library, emphasised that health authorities should work with all general practitioners to develop local health and purchasing strategies. The experience of the past four years has shown that patients receive more appropriate services when general practitioners take on direct responsibility for purchasing through fundholding. This remains voluntary.

Children (Employment)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what measures she is taking to enforce the law on the employment of children.

Mr. Bowis: The enforcement of the law protecting children at work is the responsibility of local authorities.

Suicide

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many suicides have occurred in each standard region for each year since 1979; and how many of those committing suicide were unemployed.

Mr. Bowis: The number of suicides, including undetermined deaths, in each standard region for the years 1979 to 1992 will be placed in the Library. Information on employment status at the time of death is not generally available.

Gender Therapy

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will name the health authorities which are unwilling to fund referrals to gender identity or dysphoria clinics; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available centrally.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce national criteria and protocols for gender reassignment therapy in England and Wales; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance already exists on medical proficiency and the importance of counselling. The production of protocols is primarily a matter for the medical profession.

Out-patient Appointments

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if waiting times for out-patient consultant appointments at Hereford are subject to the same criteria for patients from Powys as for patients from Hereford and Worcester; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if waiting times for out-patient consultant appointments at the Royal Shrewbury hospital are subject to the same criteria for patients from Powys as for patients from Shropshire; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Health authorities and general practitioner fundholders must purchase services for their patients according to the appropriate national and local standards applicable to their residents taking account of available resources.

Dental Services

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assessment she has made of the availability of NHS dental services for adults in rural areas; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone : Family health services authorities in England report that they can help patients in all areas to find national health service dentists.

Northern Health Authority

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement concerning the location of the new headquarters of the Northern health authority, the cost of relocation and the cost of using existing premises.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I gave the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 22 November at columns 84–85.

The business case estimated that relocating to Durham would be cheaper than retaining the existing headquarters by around £225,000 a year.

Secure Units

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what representations she has received concerning the need to amend reporting procedures when patients, whether referred under the Mental Health Acts or voluntary, abscond from a secure unit; if she will describe current reporting procedures; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: None.

The current procedures are given in chapter 21 of the code of practice to the Mental Health Act 1983 and paragraphs 76 to 80 and 288 and 289 of the memorandum to the Mental Health Act 1983, copies of which are available in the Library. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department is notified if a patient subject to restrictions under sections 41 or 49 of the Mental Health Act 1983 absents himself without leave.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what legal advice she has received or sought to clarify on whether those referred to secure units under the Mental Health Acts have a mandatory or discretionary right to exercise outside such units; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The decisions as to whether a patient is allowed to exercise outside a secure unit, whether within or outside the secure perimeter, is one for the clinical staff responsible for his or her care. In the case of a patient subject to restriction under sections 41 or 49 of the Mental Health Act 1983, any proposal to grant leave outside the perimeter of the unit has to be approved by my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

Domiciliary Care Agencies

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to introduce a system of registration for domiciliary care agencies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave the hon. Member for Warwickshire North, (Mr. O'Brien) on 12 April at columns 293–94.

Blood Donors

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what proposals she has to alter the arrangements whereby donor blood is obtained by voluntary and unpaid donation; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We have no such proposals.

Durham Business School

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute an inquiry into the lodging of NHS funds with the Durham business school for the purpose of payment for MBA studies; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: This is a local matter for Northern and Yorkshire regional health authority. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. John Greetham, chairman of the authority, for details.

Health Education Authority

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement concerning her policy for the future of the Health Education Authority.

Mr. Malone: We will inform the House once a decision has been made about the Health Education Authority.

Bishop Auckland Hospital

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent to date on the preparation of the business plan and planning for the refurbishment of Bishop Auckland hospital by the Bishop Auckland hospitals trust.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for Bishop Auckland hospitals national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Barbara Gill, chairman of Bishop Auckland hospitals NHS trust, for details.

Community Hospitals

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will make a statement concerning her policy in connection with the performance of operations at community hospitals;

(2) if she will make a statement concerning the future of the operation theatre and associated facilities at Newton Abbot community hospital.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of individual purchasers, in discussion with their hospital providers, to ensure that high standards of quality and safety are maintained for all surgical procedures. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mrs. Leverton, chairman of Plymouth and Torbay district health authority, about the future of the operating theatre at Newton Abbot hospital.

Tinnitus

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what estimate she has made of the number of people with tinnitus in England and Wales; and how many tinnitus-only clinics there are;

(2) what guidance she has issued to health authorities regarding special provision for the relief of tinnitus; what assessment she has made of the adequacy of resources available for it; and if she will make a statement;

(3) what plans she has to review the provision of NHS services for people with tinnitus; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is not known how many people suffer from tinnitus. The numbers of tinnitus-only clinics are not available centrally. However, there are facilities for the treatment of tinnitus at all national health service ear, nose and throat departments.

As with all patient groups, responsibility for the provision of services for people with tinnitus rests with health authorities who have to assess needs and priorities against their resources. We have no plans to review these provisions.

North Durham Hospital Trust

Ms Armstrong: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much has been spent to date on the preparation of the business plan, and planning for the new general hospital by the North Durham hospital trust.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for North Durham acute hospital NHS trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. C. P. Douglas, chairman of the trust, for details.

Herbal Remedies

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 86, what steps she took to obtain counsel's opinion about possible court interpretations of the term "industrially produced", prior to formulating her policy on such matters in relation to the availability of herbal remedies; and if she will make available in the Library a copy of all legal opinions received.

Mr. Sackville: It is not Government's practice to disclose such information.

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health, pursuant to her answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 86, how she is able to safeguard the position of herbal remedies in possible future legal cases; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 22 November at column 86.

Research

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what research has been carried out into the effect of insulin-like growth factor-1 on human beings.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: I have been asked to reply.

The effects of insulin-like growth factor-1, IGF-1, being a naturally occurring substance in humans, have been studied extensively and the Medical Research Council is currently funding a project on the effect of IGF-1 on binding protein in implantation and pregnancy. There are a large number of reports on research into IGF-1 on human beings which have been published in the international scientific literature. The MRC is always willing to consider soundly based proposals in competition with other applications for council's support, and funding decisions are dependent upon a peer review process.

Medicines Legislation

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will now make it her policy to decline to introduce the Medicines for Human Use (Marketing Authorisations, Pharmacovigilance and Related Matters) Regulations; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: We consulted on the proposed regulations and have made revisions to take account of representations we received. We intend to introduce the regulations shortly.

Sheep Dips

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will revise the guidance given to general practitioners on the diagnosis, treatment and benefit implications of conditions caused by exposure to organophosphorous sheep dips; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Training in diagnosis and treatment is principally a matter for the medical profession rather than the Government. All general practitioners and accident and emergency departments were sent the Department's book "Pesticide Poisoning" when it was published, copies of which are available in the Library, and the chief medical officer wrote to all doctors in England in 1991 and again with the chief executive of the Veterinary Medicines Directorate in June 1993 to alert general practitioners to the possibility of exposure to pesticides and certain veterinary medicines including organophosphorus sheep dips and to remind them of the reporting schemes operated by Employment Medical Advisory Service and the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food's veterinary medicines directive. The chief medical officers in Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland also wrote to doctors in those countries. All doctors therefore should be aware of the possibility of poisoning if over exposure to any of these products occurs and the symptoms to be expected.

This guidance is still valid.

Any benefit implications are a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Security.

WALES

Local Government Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for local government revenue spending in 1995–96.

Mr. Redwood: I propose to set total standard spending in Wales for 1995–96 at £2,767 million. This figure includes £124.4 million for care in the community. It represents an increase of £72 million, 2.7 per cent. on the comparable level of funding for 1994–95.

I propose to set central Government support for TSS through aggregate external finance at £2,450.8 million.

Within AEF I propose to make available £1,711.1 million in revenue support grant, £520 million in distributable non-domestic rates and £219.7 million in specific and supplementary grants.

My Department has today written to the local authority associations to consult them on my proposals for revenue support grant in 1995–96.

I shall announce provisional standard assessments and provisional capping principles for police authorities in Wales later this week. I shall announce provisional standard spending assessments and provisional capping principles for county and district councils in mid December. I shall announce final details of the settlement early in the new year.

Disabled People

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the number of people suffering a disability in each of the counties of Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Information of the incidence of physical and sensory disability is contained in the reports of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys published in 1988–89. These showed that 16.4 per cent. of adults and 3.1 per cent. of children in Wales had such disabilities. This information is not available separately for counties.

The 1991 census asked whether respondents had any long-term illness, health problem or handicap which limited their daily activities or the work they could do, including any problems which were due to old age. The following table contains information from the 1991 census relating to Welsh counties.

Residents with a limiting long-term illness:

	Number	Percentage of residents
Clwyd	64,051	15.7
Dyfed	57,244	16.7
Gwent	76,456	17.3
Gwynedd	35,755	15.2
Mid Glamorgan	109,379	20.5
Powys	16,735	14.2
South Glamorgan	56,202	14.3
West Glamorgan	70,173	19.4
Wales	485,995	17.1

Deeside College, Kelsterton

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he proposes to visit the Deeside college, Kelsterton.

Mr. Richards: My right hon. Friend has no plans to visit Deeside college.

Buckley Disability Action Group

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will visit the offices of Buckley Disability Action Group, Clwyd.

Mr. Richards: Neither my right hon. Friend nor I have plans to do so at present.

Holyhead

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his Department's total financial contribution to investment in the port of Holyhead; and what are the implications of such investment for travellers by sea to the Republic of Ireland and for travellers by rail to stations to Crewe and London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: Under the European regional development fund, £4.3 million has been made available to Holyhead since 1987 of which £2.5 million related to port development. In addition, since 1991, the area has attracted £300,000 assistance under the strategic development scheme, £1.9 million under the urban programme scheme and investment of £3.1 million by the WDA through the Holyhead joint venture board. The Department has also invested over £9.9 million in regional selective assistance and £525,000 in regional enterprise grant within the Holyhead travel-to-work-area.

Improvements at the port will provide a better standard of service to travellers and the business community, as well as improving the prospects for local employment.

Schools

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales which schools he has visited in each of the counties in Wales in 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: In 1994 my right hon. Friend has visited the following schools:

Name of school	County
Llanfihangel Rhydithon County Primary School	Powys
St. Davids High School	Clwyd
Eirias High School (Grant Maintained)	Clwyd
Trelai County Primary School	South Glamorgan
Dynevor Comprehensive School	West Glamorgan
Ysgol Bro Lleu	Gwynedd

I have undertaken four visits with two more programmed for December. My right hon. Friend and I are keen to visit as many schools as diary commitments and other pressures allow.

Mr. Barry Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has to assist people in Wales who suffer disability, with a view to improving access to buildings, transport and employment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: I refer the hon. Member to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People on Thursday 24 November 1994.

Public Appointments

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many individuals have responded since July 1993 to Welsh Office advertisements for the register of public appointments; how many of these have been appointed; and if he will list those appointed.

Mr. Redwood: The general advertising campaign in July 1993 inviting people to join the Welsh Office register of candidates elicited over 2,500 inquiries. Approximately 1000 individuals subsequently returned nomination forms. Six of these have been appointed to public bodies in Wales. They are:

Mr. H. K. Evans
Mr. Heddwyn Evans
Mrs. C. A. Hinton
Mr. M. C. G. Pepper
Mr. H. D. B. Williams
Mrs. V. Wilson

Health Authorities and Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what was the number of health authorities and trusts as at 30 September.

Mr. Richards: There were nine district health authorities, eight family health services authorities and 24 NHS trusts in Wales as at 30 September 1994.

Rural Transport

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will institute a review of rural transport provision in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: County councils are required to review regularly the level of public transport provision in their areas and if necessary buy in services which are not being provided commercially.

Animal Transport

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement of his policy concerning the effect on the Welsh farming industry of the reluctance of shippers to carry live animals.

Mr. Redwood: I am aware of the concerns in the industry about the ban by ferry companies on the transport of live animals. The situation is being monitored closely, and it is still too early to assess fully the impact of the ban on the farming industry. However, the Government are actively seeking agreement on European Community rules on the welfare of animals in transit, introducing tighter national laws and urgently checking proposals for new transport facilities so that those which are satisfactory can proceed.

Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth Line

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will meet Railtrack and train operators to discuss the carriage of rail freight on the Shrewsbury to Aberystwyth line; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: A meeting is planned with the director of Transrail to discuss the carriage of rail freight on all lines in Wales. The matter will also be raised at the next meeting with the chairman of Railtrack.

University of Wales

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if the Welsh Funding Council is able to, or expected to, take steps to alter the arrangements reached between the university registry and the constituent institutions within the university of Wales following the Rosser report; and if he will make a statement on the funding of those institutions.

Mr. Redwood: The arrangements agreed between the University of Wales and its constituent colleges following the Rosser report, and the University Registry's role within those arrangements, are matters for the university and the colleges to decide. The Higher Education Funding Council for Wales' responsibility is to allocate funds for teaching and research and to do so in a way which ensures accountability and value for money.

Abattoirs

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his policy on the provision of abattoirs and meat processing facilities in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Decisions about the provisions of abattoirs and meat processing facilities in Wales are a matter for the commercial judgment of those involved in the industry.

European state aid regulations put severe restrictions on the granting of financial aid to investments in abattoir facilities. However, financial support can be considered for meat processing under the European processing and marketing grant scheme administered by my Department.

Libraries

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consideration has been given to the special circumstances in Wales in the preparation of the Aslib report on the development of regional hyper-libraries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Richards: The review of the Public Library Service in England and Wales, commissioned by the Department of National Heritage from Aslib, included a case study of the Gwynedd library service. The draft report was published in September and has been circulated for comment to a wide range of library interests.

The Library and Information Service Council (Wales), which has statutory responsibility to advise the Secretary of State on library matters, has considered the draft report in full, including the recommendations relating to regional hyper-libraries, and has submitted comments to Aslib.

Coronary Disease

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has to reduce the waiting times between diagnosis and bypass operations for younger coronary disease patients in Wales; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: Younger coronary disease patients will benefit from the Government's policies to open a new heart treatment centre in south Wales; to reduce the causes of heart disease through health promotion, and to reduce waiting times generally for both outpatient and inpatient hospital diagnosis and treatment.

Apprenticeships

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the firms which have agreed to participate in the arrangements for the modern apprenticeship scheme; how many apprenticeships each has agreed to provide; what funds he is providing to each company via the appropriate training and enterprise councils; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: My Department has contracted with the training and enterprise councils in Wales for the delivery of 550 places on the modern apprenticeships programme in 1994–95. The training and enterprise councils, training providers—including colleges—and a variety of employers are involved in its delivery. Information on the firms involved is not held centrally.

Wales Engineering Centre

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make a statement on the appointment of a chief executive for the Wales Engineering Centre.

Mr. Redwood: Engineering Centre for Wales appointments are a matter for the chairman and members of the centre.

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales whether he has decided the details of the transitional arrangements to phase-in the effects of the 1995 revaluation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: The revaluation will result in significant local and sectoral changes in rateable values and rates bills. Around 76,000 properties will see increases in their bills, and around 26,000 will see reductions. The Welsh Office's consultation paper, published last month, outlined proposals for transitional arrangements to phase-in the effects of these changes. In the light of responses to that paper and the package of support announced by the Chancellor today, I propose that no business will face a year-on-year increase of more than 10 per cent. after allowing for inflation. For property with a new rateable value of less than £10,000, the maximum real increase will be 7.5 per cent. For small composite properties such as shops with living accommodation, the limit will be 5 per cent.

I estimate that around 62,000 Welsh properties will benefit from relief. I am sure that this will be widely welcomed by the business community.

The Exchequer contribution will cover part of the cost of the scheme. The remainder will be met by limiting real reductions in rates bills, as proposed in the consultation paper. For 1995–96, the limits will be 10 per cent. for properties with a rateable value under £10,000 and 5 per cent. for larger properties.

Other details of the scheme will be as proposed as in the consultation paper. Regulations giving effect to the transitional arrangements will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what is his estimate of the Welsh non-domestic rate poundage for 1995.

Mr. Redwood: The 1995 revaluation has increased overall rateable values in Wales by around 18 per cent. I propose to reduce the Welsh poundage from 44.8 to 39.0p reflecting this.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Nurses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the number of qualified nursing staff by speciality for each region in each of the last five years.

Mr. Moss: The information for 1990–93 has been placed in the Library. The figures before 1990 were not collected on a compatible basis and figures for 1994 are not yet available.

"Making Belfast Work"

Rev. Ian Paisley: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list expenditure by (a) constituency and (b) district electoral area in Belfast under the "Making Belfast Work" initiative from its inception.

Mr. Moss: Information on expenditure by constituency and district electoral area is not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, work is on-going on a database which links project information to different spatial regions.

Details of projects funded under the "Making Belfast Work" initiative from its inception to the end of the 1991–92 financial year are contained in the MBW strategy proposals. A copy of this document was placed in the House of Commons Library in April of this year. I have arranged for details of projects funded by the initiative from 1992–93 to the present also to be placed in the Library.

Roads

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many minor cross-frontier roads have been reopened to date; and how many more have still to be reopened.

Sir John Wheeler: Some 41 of the 104 crossings previously subject to closure orders are open to traffic. Of those, work at 17 crossings has been completed, is in progress on 14 others and was not required at the remaining 10. Some of the remaining 63 crossings are on private land where it will be for the landowner to decide what, if any, work is required.

Residential Care Homes

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list all of the registered residential homes and nursing homes in the Armagh and Dungannon unit, and the Newry and Mourne unit of management.

Mr. Moss [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The information requested is as follows:

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will explain the meaning and purpose of the Royal Ulster Constabulary's request on 2 December 1993 to the Irish Attorney-General to be told in due course that the warrant had been endorsed in respect of Brendan Smyth.

Sir John Wheeler [holding answer 28 November 1994]: By its letter of 2 December to the Commissioner of the Garda Siochana, the RUC inquired whether the warrants in respect of Brendan Smyth had been backed for execution. The RUC was not at that time aware that he might voluntarily return to Northern Ireland.

The Banks Residential Home

Sir James Kilfedder: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what formal proposals he has received about the future of The Banks residential home, Bangor; what is the nature of any such proposals; and what is the timescale for considering them.

Mr. Moss [holding answer 28 November 1994]: I have been asked to approve a proposal from the North Down and Ards Community trust that "The Banks" should close. I have recently visited the home and met local interests and I will announce my decision as quickly as possible.

The trust has said that, if the closure is agreed, it will explore the possibility of identifying a buyer for the building who would be willing to build a nursing home and accommodate all existing residents.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

National Lottery

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what steps he is taking to monitor the economic impact of the national lottery.

Mr. Dorrell: The national lottery has already been a great success, with £25 million raised for good causes in the first two weeks, and I expect this to continue. My Department, together with the bodies responsible for distributing lottery proceeds, will naturally be monitoring how those proceeds are spent.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether those national lottery proceeds administered by the Arts Council can be distributed to film projects.

Mr. Dorrell: Yes.

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage where funds from the national lottery destined for distribution to the good causes but not yet paid to applicants are held; what assumptions have been made about rates of interest accruing; and who will receive any such interest.

Mr. Dorrell: Proceeds from the national lottery are held in the national lottery distribution fund pending draw down by the good causes. The investment of the fund is the responsibility of the National Debt Commissioners. Interest gains received by the fund will be at a rate consistent with those normally achieved by risk-free investments. All the interest gained by the investment of the fund will be attributed equitably to the good causes and add to the sum of the proceeds available for distribution.

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) if he will give instructions that national lottery tickets should be available at Selkirk, Melrose, Lauder, Earlston and Newton St. Boswells.

(2) if he will give instructions that national lottery tickets should be available at Innerleithen, Walkerburn, West Linton and Broughton.

Mr. Dorrell: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked Peter Davis, the Director-General of the national lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the hon. Gentleman, placing copies of his response in the Libraries of the House.

Millennium Fund Commissioners

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage whether the millennium fund commissioners can distribute money to private companies or individuals.

Mr. Dorrell: Directions have been issued to the Millennium Commission under section 26 of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993, concerning matters which the commission should take into account when distributing lottery proceeds. These include the need to ensure that lottery proceeds are distributed to projects which promote the public good and which are not intended primarily for private gain. The Millennium Commission's guidance for applicants, which was issued this week, makes it clear that commercial organisations or those conducted for profit will be eligible if they can demonstrate that their project will promote the public good, and that individuals will not normally be eligible to apply for lottery funds on their own behalf.

Sports and Arts

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the future of the Foundation for Sport and the Arts.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer to the hon. Member to the Budget statement made by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer today.

Tourism

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the completion date of the Touche Ross consultants' report on the English tourist board's crown grading scheme; and on what date he expects to respond to it.

Mr. Dorrell: A review of the Crown accommodation classification and grading scheme was commissioned by the English tourist board from KPMG Peat Marwick. The work is complete and has been sent to me. I intend to write to the chairman of the ETB very soon.

Mr. Pendry: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress he has made on developing a comprehensive strategy for tourism; when he will make his Department's new policies public; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I am considering the conclusions which are emerging from work that has been taken forward with the English tourist board and the British Tourist Authority, drawing on the views of the industry. I shall make an announcement in due course.

Bowood House (Correspondence)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consideration was given to purchasing items of correspondence from Bowood house for the national archives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: The national institutions which maintain archives were notified of the recent auction of correspondence from Bowood house. I understand that the National libraries of Scotland and of Wales and the National Maritime museum successfully bid for items they wished to acquire for their archives.

Libraries

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list the five local authorities which spend (a) most and (b) least per head of population on library book provision; for the year 1992–93, together with the sums they spent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: The five local authorities in England spending the most per head of population on library book provision in 1992–93 were (source CIPFA):

City of London (£129.54), Westminster (£4.34), Lambeth (£3.75), Llanelli (£3.35) and Kingston-Upon-Thames (£3.21).

The five spending least were:

Sheffield (£0.89), Barnsley (£0.87), Hillingdon (£0.78), Wakefield (£0.72) and Brent (£0.34).

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what is the projected average expenditure for library books per head of population for (a) the United Kingdom as a whole, (b) the English counties, (c) the metropolitan districts and (d) the London boroughs for 1995–96; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Sproat: No figures for projected expenditure on library books are yet available for 1995–96.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what was the spending on library books per head of population, measured by the book index (a) in 1981–84 and (b) in 1992–93; and what steps he is taking to increase current expenditure.

Mr. Sproat: Spending per head of population, as measured by the book index used in the national book committee report, was:

(a) £1.058 in 1981–84; and

(b) £1.849 in 1992–93

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what response he has made to the 12th annual report of the national book committee, a copy of which has been sent to him.

Mr. Sproat: We are currently reviewing the findings of the national book committee report "Public Libraries and their Book Funds".

More generally, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage continues to monitor the provision of public library services in England, including book expenditure, by analysing statistics and by investigating complaints; and the Department is prepared to intervene directly where there is doubt about an authority's ability or willingness to fulfil its statutory obligations under the Public Libraries and Museums Act 1964.

Museum Staff

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many staff employed in each of the museums funded by his Department are from countries within the European Union; and how many from without.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The information is not collected by my Department and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will list, in tabular form, the staffing levels, full and part-time, of each of the museums funded by his Department.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The details of staffing levels for museums which my Department holds are not broken down into full and part-time employees. Figures collected in the course of 1994 for total staff numbers at the museums directly funded by my Department are as follows:

	Number
Royal Armouries	134
British Museum	1,079
Imperial War Museum	425
National Gallery	430
National Maritime Museum	350
National Museums and Galleries on Merseyside	560
National Museum of Science and Industry	589
National Portrait Gallery	125
Natural History Museum	825
Tate Gallery	506
Victoria and Albert Museum	850
Wallace Collection	67
Geffrye Museum	24
Horniman Museum	80
Museum of London	307
Museum of Science and Industry in Manchester	94
Sir John Soane's Museum	20

TREASURY

Classic Cars

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning his policy in connection with road fund licences for classic cars when they are not being kept for use on public roads.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: In his Budget speech today, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor gave some further details on the Government's approach to continuous licensing for vehicle excise duty licensing based on possession rather than use of a vehicle.

As the Chancellor made plain, in introducing continuous licensing, the Government will not seek to disadvantage those honest motorists, including classic car owners, who do not pay VED now because their cars are genuinely off the road. A consultation document will be issued shortly setting out details of the proposals.

EU Contributions

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will set out the (a) gross contributions, (b) receipts and (c) net contributions by the United Kingdom to the European Community for each year since 1973; and what are his estimates of those amounts until 2000 assuming current OECD estimates of growth rates and national states tax policies and (i) the adoption and (ii) the non-adoption of the Edinburgh own resources proposals.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The Government's estimates of the United Kingdom's gross contributions, receipts and net contributions to European Community institutions for the financial year 1973–74 to 1993–94, together with the latest forecast of our contributions up to 1997–98, which take account of the Edinburgh own resources proposals, are set out in the following table. The estimates for the years up to 1999–2000 which my hon. Friend requests are also set out at the foot of the table. These long-term estimates are inevitably more speculative as they extend considerably beyond the period covered by OECD estimates. Financial year forecasts of the United Kingdom's net contributions are subject to wide fluctuations for technical reasons such as the timing of payments. Longer term forecasts must be treated with particular caution.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Nelson: My Department employs two special advisers.

VAT on Building Works

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to reduce or remove VAT on building works to (a) listed buildings and (b) buildings in conservation areas.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: I have no plans to reduce or remove VAT on building works to listed buildings or buildings in conservation areas.

VAT has been applied at the standard rate to the repair, restoration and maintenance of all buildings since 1973. VAT zero-rating is permitted only for approved alterations to listed buildings.

ERM and Monetary Union

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what studies he has commissioned on the benefits and losses to Britain arising from (a) returning to the exchange rate mechanism and (b) monetary union; and if he will issue a White Paper giving his own assessment.

Mr. Nelson: My right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor has not commissioned any specific studies on the issues referred to, although naturally he considers carefully advice rendered on future economic policy. The Government have no plans to issue a White Paper on this subject.

Members and Civil Servants

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is, for an out-of-London hon. Member and for a civil service assistant secretary, each with 20 years' reckonable service (a) the normal retirement age, (b) salary, (c) annual pension and (d) the deduction from salary for pension in the last year of employment.

Sir George Young: For a member of Parliament, the pension scheme assumes a normal retirement age of 65, but accrued pension benefits are payable at age 60 to a retired member with 20 years' service. The current parliamentary salary is £31,687. On retirement, taking 30 November 1994 as the last day of service, the pension would be £11,730, with an option to give up part of the pension to provide a lump sum. The maximum lump sum allowed at 60 would be £37,940, leaving a pension of £8,500. The deductions in the last year of employment would be £1,897, or 6 per cent.

For a civil service assistant secretary grade 5, the normal retirement age depends on the policy of the employing Department, but will be between age 60 and 70. The current salary would be between £36,739 and £54,815. Under principal civil service pension scheme, again assuming 30 November 1994 as the last day of service, the pension would be between £9,064.75 and £13,518.34, together with a lump sum of between £27,194.25 and £40,555.02. The deductions from salary in the last year of employment would be between £543.89 and £811.10. A deduction of 1½ per cent. of pay is made towards the cost of dependant benefits only. The value of pension provision is taken into account in setting rates of pay.

Earnings and Inflation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list for each year since 1978 (a) the average earnings and (b) the average rate of inflation.

Mr. Nelson: The following table gives the information requested on average earnings:

April of Year	Average gross weekly earnings of full-time Adult[1] employees[2] Great Britain £
1978	79.10
1979	89.60
1980	110.20
1981	124.90
1982	136.50
1983	147.40
1984	159.30
1985	171.00
1986	184.70
1987	198.90
1988	218.40
1989	239.70

Notes:

[1] For 1978 to 1982, figures are compiled on basis of men aged 21 and over and women aged 18 and over. Since 1983 figures are compiled on the basis of employees on adult rates.

[2] Figures are average gross weekly earnings of full-time employees whose pay for the survey period was not affected by absence:

Enhanced Payments

Mr. Redmond: To ask Mr. Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to recover enhanced payments made to public officials if there is evidence of incompetence.

Mr. Aitken: None. Performance-related pay or bonuses to public officials will usually reflect performance in a preceding period. The recovery of such payments would not normally be appropriate. A decline in performance might be reflected in future payments or in other action.

Civil Service

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many voluntary resignations from the non-industrial home civil service there have been in each of the last 10 years.

Sir George Young: Information on resignations from the non-industrial home civil service is given in table 7 of "Civil Service Statistics", copies of which are in the Library.

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information he has as to how many civil servants have left the civil service for jobs in the private sector in each of the last 10 years.

Sir George Young: This information is not available.

EU Budget

Mr. Peter Shore: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer, pursuant to his circular letter to hon. Members of 11 November, what was his estimate of the United Kingdom's gross payment to the EC in 1999; what was his estimate of the average annual growth of United Kingdom gross domestic product between 1995–96 and 1999; and what was his estimate of annual average growth of community gross domestic product in the same period.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The United Kingdom's gross contribution to the European Community after abatement is expected to be £8,660 million by 1999–2000. These long-term estimates are inevitably speculative as they go considerably beyond the period covered by OECD estimates which were used in the table contained in my answer on 23 November to a question from the hon. Member for Southport (Mr. Banks), Official Report, columns 155-58.

The average annual growth rate assumptions used in making this forecast are consistent with the assumptions which will be announced in the Budget.

VAT on Fuel

Mr. Battle: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he has made of the increase in VAT on fuel from April 1995 on the inflation rate.

Mr. Nelson [holding answer 24 November 1994]: It is estimated that the increase in VAT on domestic fuel and power in April 1995 will add just over 0.4 per cent. to the retail prices index. Inflation is expected to remain well within the Government's target range 1–4 per cent. through the course of 1995. The imposition of VAT on domestic fuel and power is essential to raise revenue and to encourage energy conservation, contributing to Rio commitments on global warming.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Bi-valve Molluscs

Mr. Steen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how directive 91/492/EEC is implemented in the Netherlands and in France; and what assessment he has made of the nature of the monitoring of that directive and whether it is as rigorous on the continent as it is in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: It is for the European Commission to keep track of such matters and to assess the effectiveness of any supporting procedures, such as monitoring in this case. We ourselves have little information on the progress of implementation of directive 91/492/EEC in other member states. There is not independent check that we can usefully apply.

Bovine Immuno-deficiency Virus

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he has considered reports that the former milk marketing board refused to take milk for reasons of BIV from a cow herd which itself was in part subsequently slaughtered for use in meat products; and whether he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Infection with bovine immunodeficiency virus—BIV—is neither notifiable nor reportable and the disposal of infected animals is the responsibility of the owner of the animals. Infection with BIV should not preclude any bovine animals, which are not showing signs of disease, going for slaughter for human consumption subject to the normal ante-mortem and post-mortem inspections and other statutory controls on slaughterhouse operations, nor should it preclude the milk from such animals going for human consumption. In March this year, the milk marketing board decided to stop buying milk from a farm where there were cattle with serological evidence of exposure to BIV. The then Minister reviewed this decision, as required by the milkmarketing scheme, and decided not to uphold it on the ground that the board had gone outside its powers in the scheme.

Agricultural Land

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is his estimate of the amount of grade one agricultural land accepted for building development in each of the last five years.

Mr. Jack: This information is not held centrally and could be collected only at disproportionate cost.

Cows

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the relationship between ovarian cysts, mastitis in cows and doses of BST administered to cows.

Mrs. Browning: Such issues were covered in the safety assessment carried out by the Veterinary Products Committee and the Medicines Commission, in advising the licensing authority on the two applications received for licences for BST products.

Flooding

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what proportions of the costs of flooding in the last 12 months for which figures are available can be attributed to increased run-off from land.

Mr. Jack: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only by extensive surveys and flood modelling.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the latest information on the extent and costs of flooding of roads and property in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Jack: Surveys of flood risk areas are undertaken by the National Rivers Authority at local level and the results made available to local authorities to inform the planning process. In addition, the Association of British Insurance has recently published a report entitled "Identification of Coastal Flood Areas in England and Wales", in collaboration with the National Rivers Authority and the Ministry.

Claims for flood damage to property are handled by insurance companies. The risk of flooding is reduced significantly through expenditure by Government and the responsible local agencies on the maintenance and improvement of flood defences.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what evidence he has that the change-over from grass or spring cereal crops to winter cereal crops contributes to the run-off from land.

Mr. Jack: Grass is the most effective type of vegetation for reducing the rate at which rainfall runs off from land, and there is evidence that agricultural practices which leave land without grass or crop cover can lead to an increased rate of run off. How spring cereals compare with winter cereals in this respect depends on local circumstances, but winter cereals may provide some limited crop cover—and hence surface water storage—in the winter months when rainfall is generally highest.

Live Animal Transport

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many lorries transporting animals through Plymouth harbour on the night of 21 November (a) did and (b) did not fulfil the requirements of the journey plan.

Mrs. Browning: Nine vehicles arrived for loading on the ferry, of which three were turned back by the Ministry veterinary inspector on the ground that the arrangements made to protect the welfare of the animals during the proposed journey were not satisfactorily recorded on the journey plans presented for his inspection.

Sheep Dip

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will give the latest available figures for the number of sheep farmers authorised under the certification scheme to purchase organophosphorous dip products in Wales, Scotland and each of his Department's regions in England; and what, in each case, was the total estimated number of sheep farmers.

Mrs. Browning: The certification scheme is run by the National Proficiency Tests Council. There are 90,000 registered sheep farmers in the United Kingdom. The number of farmers who have applied for certification in each NPTC region by 27 October 1994 is set out in the following table. The information is not available by MAFF regions.

By 11 November, a further 647 sheep farmers had applied for certification. A total of 1,761 certificates had also been issued by that date. None of this data is available on a corresponding regional basis.

The decision on whether or not to apply for certification is a matter for the individual sheep farmer, bearing in mind their judgment on the possible need to purchase OP sheep dips for the treatment of sheep in the coming year.

Badgers

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will place in the Library papers relating to the epidemiological investigation by his department's veterinary staff into the TB herd breakdown on the Highgrove estate in November 1993.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 24 November 1994]: No. The report of this investigation, as of similar investigations into individual animal disease outbreaks, contains information which is unsuitable for disclosure on commercial confidentiality and other grounds.

Newcastle Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many cases of Newcastle disease were identified in each year since 1985.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The last confirmed case of Newcastle disease in Great Britain was in 1984.

DEFENCE

Indonesia

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his Department's budget spending planned for the current year on training for the Indonesian military; and what was so spent in 1992–93 and 1993–94.

Mr Soames: It is not our practice to disclose information of this nature.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what defence matters were discussed when the Chief and Vice Chief of Defence Staff visited Indonesia last year.

Mr. Soames: The visits by the Chief of the Defence Staff and Vice Chief of the Defence Staff to Indonesia in February 1994 and October 1994 cost my department a total of £11,032.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date the arms working party clearance was given in respect of the proposed sale of Scorpion light tanks to Indonesia.

Mr. Freeman: Information relating to arms working party clearances is commercially confidential. A company receiving approval through the AWP process still has an obligation to apply for an export licence from the Department of Trade and Industry before exporting goods. The consideration of the export licence application will, in the normal way, take account of all relevant factors.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what equipment is covered by the memorandum of understanding between the United Kingdom and Indonesia; and what is the total value of goods already sold.

Mr. Freeman: Any memorandum of understanding between the Government of the United Kingdom and another Government is confidential between the two Governments. Details of the value of goods sold are confidential between the purchaser and the supplier.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Soames: My Department employs one special adviser. Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Military Training

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the countries from which foreign students have visited or will visit the United Kingdom for military training in United Kingdom military establishments during 1994.

Mr. Soames: Those countries from which foreign students have visited or will visit the United Kingdom for military training in United Kingdom military establishments during 1994 are as follows;

HMS Brazen

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the estimated total eventual costs of repairing HMS Brazen following her grounding; where the repairs will be carried out; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: The initial repair work to HMS Brazen was carried out in the Chilean port of Talcahuano and further repair work will be undertaken by Devonport Management Limited at Devonport royal dockyard under the existing commercial arrangements for operational repairs. The eventual total cost of the repair work is expected to be some £2.5 million.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what conditions as to the use of British defence suppliers for equipment updates and replacement were agreed in the contract for the sale of four type 21 frigates to Pakistan; what information he has on the value of contracts placed for such work (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) elsewhere; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: No conditions as to the use of British defence suppliers were stipulated in the contract for the sale of six—not four—ex-RN type 21 frigates to Pakistan. United Kingdom companies competed for all subsequent major Pakistan upgrade or replacement programmes and so far two equipment contracts have been won. It is not our practice to disclose details of values of such contracts which are commercially confidential between the supplier and the customer Government. Authoritative details of contracts awarded for major upgrades elsewhere are not available.

Sir Nicholas Bonsor: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which helicopters are available for use on the type 23 frigates currently on trials or training programmes.

Mr. Soames: Mark 3 Lynx helicopter are available, for use as necessary to type 23 frigate on trials or testing programmes.

Car Theft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the result of his Department's inquiry into the theft of a car from the home of the Army commander of southern district on 11 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A private car belonging to the General Officer Commanding, southern district, was stolen from the grounds of his official residence on 11 October. The theft was investigated by the Hampshire constabulary as a criminal matter. The vehicle was found on 4 November and returned to its owner.

Correspondence

Mr. McNamara: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when the hon. Member for Kingston upon Hull, North can expect a reply to his letter of 19 September concerning the recall to his unit of one of his constituents who had previously been discharged on medical priority.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State replied to the hon. Member on 22 November.

Northolt Airport

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what assessment he has made of the report by the Policy Studies Institute on Northolt airport; if it remains his policy to retain Northolt as an exclusively military airport whilst allowing no more than the currently permitted number of civilian or business flights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Consideration of the report issued by the Adam Smith Institute on airport capacity in the London area is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport, although RAF activity at Northolt, in particular flying operations, will continue to have primacy over civil use.

Byelaws

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what have been the legal costs of his Department's police and the Crown Prosecution Service relating to byelaws at HMS Forest Moor and Menwith Hill station since 1990; how much in costs has been awarded to people appealing against their convictions; and how many appeals against convictions concerning byelaw offences have been upheld.

Mr. Soames: The costs incurred by the Ministry of Defence police as they relate specifically to HMS Forest Moor and Menwith Hill station are not recorded separately and could only be provided at disproportionate cost; costs to the Crown Prosecution Service are a matter for my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General.

Records of costs awarded to individuals appealing against their convictions and of appeals upheld against convictions for byelaws offences are not held centrally.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons he is considering new military land byelaws; and to what extent he regards existing byelaws as being extant and operational.

Mr. Soames: New Military Lands Act byelaws are being drafted to replace those ruled to be defective by the courts; and for establishments where changes to the boundaries necessitate new byelaws. The opportunity is being taken to review many existing sets of byelaws.

Military Lands Act byelaws are extant and operable at all sites to which they apply, except where they have been found defective by the courts.

Molesworth

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who controls the National Security Agency base at Molesworth; and by whom the base commander is employed.

Mr. Soames: RAF Molesworth is situated on Crown freehold land and Her Majesty's Government retain control over the use made of the site and its facilities. These facilities are operated with the agreement of Her Majesty's Government by the United States European Command and the base commander is an officer of the United States Air Force.

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the five items received at NSA Molesworth containing polychlorinated biphenyls, referred to in his answer of 25 October 1994, Official Report, column 584; and what is the name of the contractor through which they were disposed of.

Mr. Soames: The five items suspected of containing PCBs were two empty five gallon cans of electrical insulation oil, and three items of electronic scrap and capacitators. The licensed contractor used to dispose of the contaminated items was Biffa Waste Services Ltd.

Nuclear Weapons

Mr. Madden: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for what reasons convoys transporting nuclear weapons from Faslane to Burghfield by road do not display radiation symbols on vehicles.

Mr. Soames: Regulation 20f of the Radioactive Substances (Carriage by Road) (Great Britain) Regulations 1974, as amended in 1985, exempts vehicles carrying nuclear weapons from the requirement to display radiation symbols.

Royal Dockyards

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total amount spent by his Department on the privatisation of the royal dockyards at Devonport and Rosyth.

Mr. Freeman: During the period between 18 October 1993, when my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence announced our policy towards the future management of the dockyards—Official Report, 18 October 1993, columns 39-41—and 31 October 1994, total identifiable expenditure for work associated with developing and implementing plans for the proposed privatisation of the royal dockyards amounts to some £7.2 million. Given that the current dockyard management contracts are due to expire no later than April 1996, my Department would expect to have incurred in any case costs for work related to any future management arrangements for the royal dockyards.

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total amount paid to consultants by his Department for work concerned with the privatisation of HM royal Devonport dockyard.

Mr. Freeman: Payments made or outstanding to consultants for work related to the proposed privatisation of the royal dockyards between 18 October 1993, when my right hon. and learned Friend announced our policy towards the future management of the dockyards,—Official Report, 18 October 1993, columns 39-41—and 31 October 1994 total some £6.5 million. Costs attributable to Devonport cannot be separately identified.

Tornado

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what proposals he has to replace F3 Tornados assessed as no longer suitable for operational use, subsequent to the 25 fatigue index modification contract carried out at RAF St. Athan by Airwork Ltd;

(2) if he will give the number of F3 Tornado aircraft damaged in the course of the 25 fatigue index modification contract by Airwork Ltd. at RAF St. Athan, which have been assessed as (a) capable of flying again and (b) suitable only for cannibalisation

Mr. Freeman: It is the intention that all aircraft, damaged by Airwork, will be recovered to a full operational standard and returned to the RAF for normal operational use.

Equipment Programmes

Mr. Butler: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now ready to issue further invitations to tender for equipment programmes following his statement on 14 July.

Mr. Freeman: I am pleased to confirm the plans on three major equipment programmes. For the Royal Navy, we are now ready to issue an invitation to tender for the build of a further batch of up to three type 23 frigates. These vessels will form a most valuable contribution to the maintenance of a modern, capable force of 35 destroyers and frigates.

I am also glad to confirm the plans on two weapons programmes of major importance to the RAF. An ITT will be issued for a conventionally-armed stand-off missile to enhance the RAF's capability for precision attack against high-value fixed targets, the importance of which was demonstrated in the Gulf conflict. In addition, we shall at the same time be issuing an ITT for an advanced air-launched anti-armour weapon. This will be a vital element of the offensive support capability to be provided by the Harrier GR7, Tornado and Eurofighter 2000 in the next decade.

Defence Contracts

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money was paid by his Department to GEC to bid against VSEL for the contract for the Trafalgar class of submarines.

Mr. Freeman [holding answer 25 November 1994]: We offered contracts to both GEC and VSEL for studies to produce, in advance of bids, innovative and improved construction and integration techniques in order to reduce the ultimate costs to my Department. Both companies have agreed to provide early sight of such proposals but only GEC accepted the offer of a contract to do so. The value of the contract is commercially confidential.

Royal Marines School of Music

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his estimate of the costs incurred if the proposed relocation of the Royal Marines school of music to Portsmouth takes place in respect of (a) hiring new music professors and other civilian staff at Portsmouth, (b) expenditure on contract staff and casuals while permanent posts are being filled and (c) training new staff.

Mr. Soames [holding answer 25 November 1994]: Salary costs for 15 professors of music are estimated at £481,000. This figure is the same regardless of the location chosen for the Royal Marines school of music. The salary costs for other directly-employed civilian staff should the Royal Marines school of music move to Portsmouth are estimated at £165,000. This figure compares with that estimated for continued occupation at Deal of £932,000. The cost of recruitment action to take on new staff is expected to be negligible.

Pre-planning and timely recruiting would aim to avoid the use of contract staff and casuals while permanent posts are being filled.

Any training necessary for new staff would be conducted under current internal arrangements at negligible cost.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Child Support Agency

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many deductions from earnings orders have been served in the last 12 months by each of the Child Support Agency offices.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. John Spellar, dated 29 November 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of deductions from earnings orders that have been served in the last 12 months by each of the Child Support Agency offices.

During 1993–94, 2,600 deductions from earnings orders (DEOs) were issued. In the first year of the Agency's operations, this information was collected on a national basis only, and cannot be broken down by month or by regional centre.

Between April and September 1994, a further 11,470 DEOs were issued, split between the Agency's regional centres as follows:

	Number
Belfast	2,006
Birkenhead	1,981
Dudley	1,296
Falkirk	2,162
Hastings	2,323
Plymouth	1,702

I hope that this reply is helpful.

Benefits and Contributions Agencies

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many beds have been stolen from the nursing and first aid stations on the Newcastle sites of his Department's Benefits Agency and Contributions Agency;

(2) if he will place in the Library a list of all items over £100 in value stolen from the Newcastle sites of (a) the Benefits Agency and (b) the Contributions Agency;

(3) what was the cost of stolen items from the Newcastle sites of the (a) DSS Benefits and (b) DSS Contributions Agency in each of the last three financial years;

(4) what computing equipment has been stolen from the Newcastle sites of his Department's Benefits and Contributions Agencies; and whether data on staff or claimants were removed with the computing equipment.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The administration of the Contributions Agency is a matter for Mr. George Bertram, the acting chief executive. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from George Bertram to Mr. Jim Cousins, dated 28 November 1994:

PARLIAMENTARY QUESTIONS ON SECURITY AT DSS, LONGBENTON

As Acting Chief Executive of the Contributions Agency, I have responsibility for answering questions about relevant operational matters. As I have overall control of accommodation and equipment for all Agencies which share the Department's Newcastle site, I have been asked to respond to the points raised in your recent Parliamentary Questions about the theft of equipment. Because of the nature of the questions I have combined the responses.

It is over nine years since one bed was reported missing from a sick bay of the nursing facilities on the Newcastle site of the, then, Department of Health and Social Security.

I have attached as an annex to this letter a list of individual items stolen and which were valued at over £100.

For the financial years in question the recorded value of the items reported stolen on the Newcastle site are:-

Separate figures are not kept for the individual agencies on the site. All Information Technology equipment is included in these figures.

The computer equipment stolen has been stand-alone personal computers, printers, and a software package. Data on staff and customers is not stored on this equipment. The annex gives more detail on these losses.

We regularly meet with the Departmental Security Office and our Departmental Information Technology Security Group to address the current levels of security, exchange information and consider whether further improvements can be made. It is clear from this work that the current threat to IT equipment and other items from an increase in theft is the same for all governmental departments and commercial premises.

Our physical security at the Newcastle site, which is 64 acres and employs some 9000 people has been reviewed in the last year. We have made a number of improvements such as the completion of the perimeter fencing of the site and the introduction of modern security equipment but we continue to look for further ways of improvement and are very much aware of this in our plans for the future.

Quarry House

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement on his plans to transfer more Benefits Agency staff to Quarry house, Leeds.

Mr. Roger Evans: The deployment of Benefits Agency staff is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 28 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about plans to transfer more Benefits Agency staff to Quarry House, Leeds.

There are presently no plans to transfer more Benefits Agency staff into Quarry House. A number of Benefits Agency staff are located in other buildings in Leeds and should space become available in Quarry House in the future the Agency would consider the possibility of transferring some of these staff into the vacated offices.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Payment of Benefits

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many people in England and Wales collected (a) income support, (b) family credit, (c) child benefit, (d) pension, (e) widow's pension, (f) invalidity benefit and (g) unemployment benefit, from the Post Office each week in each year since 1989–90;

(2) how many people in England and Wales had (a) income support, (b) family credit, (c) child benefit, (d) pension, (e) widow's pension, (f) invalidity benefit and (g) unemployment benefit paid directly into a bank account in each year since 1989–90.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Geoffrey Robinson, dated 28 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking about the payment of benefit into bank accounts or at the Post Office.

Information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because data is not collated relating to the number of customers being paid on a weekly basis at Post Offices. To obtain this information would be at a disproportionate cost.

That information that is available regarding payments by automated credit transfer is not captured geographically nor weekly and to obtain it for England and Wales would be at a disproportionate cost.

However, I have provided at Appendix A a table showing the number of customers, on an annual basis, from the year 1989–90 who have been paid by automated credit transfer.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

[1] The option to have Income Support paid by ACT came into effect in w/c 31 October 1993.
[2] No separate figures are available for payments of Retirement Pension and Widows Pension.
[3] The option to have Invalidity Benefit (IVB) paid by ACT came into effect in w/c 31 May 1993. Figures available showing the number of payments by IVB are combined with Sickness Benefit and Severe Disablement Allowance Figures.
[4] The option to have Unemployment Benefit paid by ACT came into effect in w/c 20 September 1993. These figures have been obtained from the Employment Service Agency.

Compensation Recovery Unit

Mr. Kirkwood: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will publish details of the work carried out by his Department's compensation recovery unit since it was established showing the number of cases in which it had reclaimed benefit payments, the total sum recovered for each year of its operation and the total annual operating cost of the unit including all administrative costs, salaries and all other outlays incurred by the unit since its creation.

Mr. Roger Evans: This is a matter for Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Archy Kirkwood, dated 28 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for the number of cases in which the Compensation Recovery Unit had reclaimed benefit payments, the total sum recovered and the annual operating costs of the Unit including all administrative costs, salaries and all other outlays since its creation.

The information requested has been provided for each financial year.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

National Insurance Numbers

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will introduce legislation to restrict the use of the national insurance number by his Department to benefit-related purposes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Arbuthnot: I have no such plans at present but the position is being kept under review.

Data Protection

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what undertaking he gave to the Data Protection Registrar in respect of restricting the national insurance number to tax and benefit-related purposes; and what revision he has made to the undertaking following the use of that number by a private sector firm in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Arbuthnot: The Data Protection Registrar has been advised it is departmental policy to restrict use of the national insurance number to national insurance, tax and social security benefit-related purposes. I can confirm that a request has been received from a private sector organisation for permission to use the national insurance number and that this is currently under consideration within the terms of the policy.

Learning Difficulties

Mr. Livingstone: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security on what criteria he decides to meet or consult organisations of people with learning difficulties.

Mr. Hague: The same criteria are used for organisations of people with learning difficulties as others representing disabled people.

Since I became Minister for Social Security and Disabled People, I have met as many organisations as possible covering a wide range of disabilities, including people with learning difficulties.

National Insurance

Mr. Mans: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he has yet completed his review of national insurance contributions for 1995–96.

Mr. Lilley: I have completed the annual review under section 141 of the Social Security Administration Act 1992. For the second year running, the Government will help employers by reducing the three rates of contributions payable for lower-paid employees. These will be cut by 0.6 per cent. for all employees earning less than £205 a week at a cost of £250 million a year. This will encourage the creation of new jobs. It will complement a further measure which the Government propose which will give employers taking on someone who has been out of work for at least two years a full national insurance rebate for up to a year. I am also increasing the help with fuel costs for pensioners, widows and certain disabled people which I introduced last year. Together with the general increases in contributory benefit expenditure which I am maintaining, this will mean a continuing shortfall in the national insurance fund between income and outgoings, but I will maintain the stability of the fund by means of the Treasury grant. The national insurance contribution rebate will be introduced from April 1996. The other changes to NICs will take effect from 6 April 1995.

Employers and Employees

There will be no change to the standard rates of contributions for either employees or employers, which remain at 10 per cent. and 10.2 per cent. respectively.

In line with the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act 1992, the lower earnings limit for class 1 contributions is to be raised to £59 a week, which is the nearest whole pound to the basic retirement pension rate for a single person from April 1995. The upper earnings limit is to be raised to £440 a week which is slightly less than 7.5 times the new basic pension rate as provided by the Social Security Contributions and Benefits Act. These new earnings limits will replace the current ones of £57 and £430 respectively.

Under the current structure, employees whose earnings reach the lower earnings limit will continue to pay an initial contributions of 2 per cent. of that limit and standard rate contributions of 10 per cent. on that portion of their earnings which exceeds the lower but not the upper earnings limit. For employers the three contribution rates for the lower paid will be reduced by 0.6 per cent. each to 3 per cent., 5 per cent. and 7 per cent. respectively. The thresholds for these rates will also be raised so that from April 1995 they apply to weekly earnings which fall below the ceilings of £105, £150 and £205 respectively, compared with £100, £145 and £200 at present.

Not Contracted Out Employees and their Employers

Neither the employee nor his employer will have to pay any contributions if earnings are less than £59 a week. Those whose earnings do not exceed £430—the former upper earnings limit—will pay 16p a week less in contributions than at present. This is because a further £2 of their weekly earnings will be subject to a deduction of 2 per cent. rather than 10 per cent. For employees with earnings above £430 the maximum possible increase will be 84p a week. Employers will pay between 35p and £6.53 a week less where the employee's earnings are less than £205 a week. There will be no change for employers where earnings are £205 a week or more.

Contracted Out Employees and their Employers

Those with earnings between £59 and £430—the former upper earnings limit—will pay 13p a week less. For those who earn more than £430 the maximum possible increase will be 69p a week. Employers will pay between 29p and £6.57 a week less where the employee's earning are less than £205 a week. There will be little change for employers where earnings are £205 a week or more.

Rebate for Employers taking on the long-term unemployed

Employers who hire someone who has been out of work for two years or more will get a full NIC rebate for that person for a year, starting in April 1996.

Self-Employed People

The flat rate class 2 contribution will be raised by 20p to £5.85 a week.

There will be no increase in the rate of class 4 contributions, currently 7.3 per cent. The annual limits of profits between which class 4 contributions are paid will be raised to £6,640 and £22,880 from £6,490 and £22,360 respectively. Self-employed people who pay only class 2 contributions will pay an extra £10.40 a year in 1995–96.

For people with profits between £6,490 and £22,360—the former upper profits limit—class 4 contributions will be reduced by £10.95 per year assuming an unaltered level of profits. For those self-employed people with profits at or above the new upper profits limit the annual charge for class 4 contributions will be £27.01 higher.

Class 3 (Voluntary) Contributions

The rate of class 3 contributions will be raised by 20p to £5.75 a week.

National Health Service Allocation

The allocation to the national health service, currently 1.05 per cent. from employees and 0.9 per cent. from employers, remains unchanged.

Treasury Grant

In accordance with section 2(2) of the Social Security Act 1993, I propose to maintain the level of the national insurance fund during 1995–96 by means of a grant from the Treasury. I estimate that the grant required will be approximately £5.1 billion.

As usual, I shall be laying a draft order before Parliament together with a report by the Government Actuary describing the effects of my proposals.

Benefit Rates

Mr. Rowe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will set out details of the new rates of benefit proposed from April 1995.

Mr. Lilley: As usual, the annual uprating of social security benefits will take place in the first full week of the tax year—in 1995 this will be the week beginning on 10 April.

The increases announced today are fully in line with the Government's commitment to help those in greatest need and includes the second stage of extra help for the effect of VAT on domestic fuel. Expenditure on social security will be £86.5 billion in 1995–96, £90 billion in 1996–97 and £93.5 billion in 1997–98.

I have reviewed social security benefits in accordance with section 150 of the Administration Act 1992. My proposals, which are set out in the schedule, fully reflect the commitment to increase all major benefits in line with inflation. The statutory instruments to implement them will be laid before both Houses for debate. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland proposes to introduce similar changes for Northern Ireland.

All national insurance benefits, excluding some transitional amounts, will be uprated at least in line with the annual increase in the retail price index up to September which this year is 2.2 per cent.

Income-related benefits will rise by around 1.9 per cent., slightly more than the Rossi index—RPI less certain housing costs—owing to the extra help for VAT on domestic fuel.

Fifteen million people gained from the extra help for VAT on domestic fuel which was announced last year. They include pensioners receiving retirement pension and those receiving income support, widow's benefit, invalidity benefit—to be replaced by long-term incapacity benefit—or severe disablement allowance. From April 1995, the total extra help will be up to £1 a week for a single person or £1.40 a week for a couple. This extra money is a permanent addition to benefit rates and will be subject to future upratings in the normal way.

Social fund cold weather payments have already increased by £1 this month. From 1 November 1995 they will rise by a further £1.50 to £8.50. This increase is higher than the amount announced last year and will give substantial extra help to income support recipients who are pensioners, disabled people or have young children.

Some key points of the 1995 increases are:

Retirement Pension

Retirement pension will rise by £1.55 to £59.15 per week for a single person and by £2.35 to £94.45 for a couple. In common with certain other benefits, these amounts include the extra help for the effect of VAT on fuel.

Incapacity Benefit

Incapacity benefit replaces sickness benefit and invalidity benefit from 13 April 1995, the initial basic rate of long-term incapacity benefit will be £59.15 per week. This represents a full increase in line with inflation compared with the previous rate of invalidity benefit, as well as including extra help for the effect of VAT on domestic fuel.

Unemployment Benefit

Unemployment benefit for a single person will rise from £45.45 to £46.45 per week.

Child Benefit

Child benefit will be fully uprated in line with prices; this means that the new rates will be £10.40 per week for the first or eldest eligible child and £8.45 for each subsequent child.

War Pensions

War pensions will, again, be uprated fully in line with prices. the 100 per cent. rate of basic war disablement pension will increase from £98.90 to £101.10 per week.

Disability Working Allowance

Disability working allowance will be uprated fully in line with the Rossi index. In addition, the allowance for couples/lone parents will rise from £63.75 to £73.70 per week and the threshold for single people will rise from £43 to £54.80 per week.

A schedule of the main proposed social security benefit rates to April 1995 will be placed in the Library.

Industrial Injury Benefits

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what would be the cost of restoring the reduction in industrial injury benefits made since 1979.

Mr. Hague: It is not possible to make a reliable estimate of the cost involved.

Occupational Pensions

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what level the £35 limit above which occupational pensions are deducted from unemployment benefit could be raised without the cost exceeding the estimated saving from extending such deductions to people aged under 55 years.

Mr. Roger Evans: Estimates of the precise level at which this occurs are not reliable as it is necessary to estimate the number of people who become entitled to contributory benefit because the limit has been raised, and estimating this number with accuracy becomes more difficult the higher the level of limit. However, it is estimated that the £35 per week limit above which occupational pensions are deducted from unemployment benefit could be raised to between £65 and £75.

Notes:

1. Estimates assumed 2.4 million unemployed claimants (GB) and 500,000 unemployment benefit claimants.
2. Estimate assumes that the job seeker's allowance has been introduced and in particular that contributory benefit for the unemployed lasts for six months.
3. Figure estimated using the PSM with 1990–91–92 FES data and 1994 unemployment benefit statistics.

Benefits (Remortgages)

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) what are the projected savings resulting from the cessation of payments in respect of concomitant interest in respect of remortgages;

(2) how many people claiming income support have sold their property since May 1994 following non-payment by the Department of the concomitant interest payments to cover remortgage payments;

(3) if he will make a statement regarding concomitant interest payments;

(4) how many people claiming income support who have remortgaged their home have not been paid concomitant interest payments by his Department since the rule change of May 1994;

(5) what the projected year–on–year figures are for concomitant interest payments in the years 1995–96 and 1996–97.

Mr. Roger Evans: The effect of the change to the rules on income support help with mortgage interest payments that came into effect on 2 May 1994 was to stop benefit from being increased to meet the interest on loans that people take out while they are receiving income support. Loans that result from the special needs of disabled person, the need to provide separate sleeping accommodation for children of different sexes over the age of 10 years or for essential repairs and improvements are excluded from this restriction. Where remortgages are concerned, income support continues to be able to held with the interest on the parts of a remortgage that were taken out to pay off loans, or parts of loans, that would have been eligible for benefit had they not been paid off. The new rules only apply if the amount of interest that has to be met has increased as a result of the remortgage, and this increase is not covered by one of the exempt categories.

We have no evidence of anyone having sold their property as a result of the rule change. The other information that has been requested is not available.

War Pensioners

Mr. Simon Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans exist to reform provision with regard to war pensioners.

Mr. Roger Evans: None.

Organophosphorous Sheep Dips

Mr. Tyler: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what new advice he has received from the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council on medical conditions caused by exposure to organophosphorous sheep dips; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: I have received no new advice. The council keeps developments in the field of occupational diseases under review. I understand that the council's research working group is aware of reports on the links between organophosphates and health.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Opportunities

Mr. Davidson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proposals he has to create employment opportunities for 16 to 25-year-olds.

Mr. Paice: The Government will continue with the policies that have already reduced unemployment among young people under 25 by over 100,000 in the last year and given the United Kingdom an unemployment rate for this age group among the lowest in Europe.

Employment Initiatives

Mr. Mark Robinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives his Department has undertaken to reduce unemployment rates among the over-50 age group.

Miss. Widdecombe: The Government have introduced a number of measures to reduce unemployment among the over-50 age group.

Training (Women)

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what action his Department is taking to promote training for women returning to the labour market after having children.

Miss. Widdecombe: The Department is promoting training and employment opportunities for women through its new horizons and fair play initiatives. Women who wish to return to work can enter training for work without having to be registered as unemployed for six months.

European Union (Discussions)

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last discussed the issue of unemployment with Employment Ministers of other member states of the European Union; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: Unemployment has naturally figured prominently in the discussions I have had with my counterparts. I want to make sure that it moves to the top of the Community's agenda.

Regional Expenditure

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is his Department's expenditure per head of population in the south-west; and what is his Department's average expenditure per head for all English regions.

Miss Widdecombe: It is not possible to give a comprehensive and accurate comparison of the Department's expenditure between the south-west and other English regions because much of the Department's budget is managed on a national, rather than regional basis and because not all the Department's activities are organised within common regional boundaries.

Stress

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what assessment his Department has made of the effect of stress on employees.

Mr. Oppenheim: In December 1993, the Health and Safety Executive published a major review of the scientific literature on the nature, causes and effects of occupational stress. A copy of the review, which was undertaken on HSE's behalf by Professor Tom Cox of Nottingham university, was placed in the Library.

Coalfield Communities Campaign

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of the coalfield communities campaign to discuss employment issues.

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend has not been asked to meet representatives of the coalfield communities campaign.

Labour Statistics

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many adult males were placed in full-time employment in the month covered by the most recently published statistics on unemployment.

Mr. Oppenheim: Past surveys indicate that the majority of people who leave unemployment go into jobs.

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the current figures for unemployment (a) in the United Kingdom and (b) in other European Union countries and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Portillo: The United Kingdom unemployment rate is lower than that for all EU countries except Portugal and Luxembourg. Details are provided in the following table:

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people were employed regionally and nationally for each year since 1979 for less than eight hours per week; and to what extent they are counted by his Department as being in work.

Mr. Oppenheim: This information could be provided from the labour force survey only at a disproportionate cost. Data from 1984 onwards may be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

The definition of employment used by the LFS follows the guidelines of the International Labour Organisation. This counts as "in employment" everyone who did at least one hour of paid work in the reference week.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what were the median and modal age by gender, both regionally and nationally, of those workers with two or more part-time jobs aged (a) 21 to 24 years, (b) 25 to 34 years, (c) 35 to 54 years and (d) 55 years and over in each year since 1979;

(2) what were the regional and national numbers of jobless two-adult households who have been without work for (a) six months, (b) one year and (c) two years and over in each year since 1979 to date;

(3) if he will list the numbers of unemployed, both regionally and nationally, for white collar occupations, in each year since 1979.

Mr. Oppenheim: This information could be provided from the labour force survey only at a disproportionate cost. Data from 1984 onwards may be obtained via the Quantime LFS service available in the Library.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United kingdom are in work, as a percentage of the total population of working age; and what are the comparable figures for the other G7 countries.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the following table:

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of part-time jobs are taken by women with an earning partner.

Mr. Oppenheim: Latest estimates from the spring 1994 labour force survey for Great Britain show that 58 per cent. of the people whose main job was part-time were women with a partner in employment.

Sir Michael Neubert: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people in the United Kingdom are in work, as a proportion of the total population of working age; and what are the figures in other major EU countries.

Mr. Oppenheim: The information is given in the following table:

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what was (a) the number of adult male part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1993 and (b) the proportion of those workers whose earnings, excluding overtime, fell below (i) £5.88 per hour, (ii) £5.53 per hour, (iii) £4.15 per hour, (iv) £4 per hour, (v) £3.50 per hour, (vi) £3 per hour and (vii) £2.50 per hour;

(2) if he will list the proportions of manual, non-manual and all full-time (a) male and (b) female employees earning less per week than (i) £221.50, (ii) £208.53, (iii) £156.40, (iv) £150.80, (v) £131.95 and (vi) £94.25 excluding overtime payments (1) by standard economic region, (2) for Great Britain as a whole and (3) for Northern Ireland;

(3) what was (a) the number of adult female part-time workers in Great Britain in April 1993 and (b) the proportion of those workers whose earnings, excluding overtime, fell below (i) £5.88 per hour, (ii) £5.53 per hour, (iii) £4.15 per hour, (iv) £4 per hour, (v) £3.50 per hour, (vi) £3 per hour and (vii) £2.50 per hour;

(4) if he will list the proportion of (i) full-time employees earning less per week than (a) £221.50, (b) £208.53, (c) £156.40, (d) £150.80, (e) £131.95, (f) £113.10 and (g) £94.25 excluding overtime payments and (ii) part-time employees earning less per hour than (1) £5.88 per hour, (2) £5.53 per hour, (3) £4.15 per hour, (4) £4 per hour, (5) £3.50 per hour, (6) £3 per hour and (7) £2.50 excluding overtime payments, indicating (i) and (ii) in relation to (I) Great Britain as a whole, (II) each county in England, (III) each county in Wales, (IV) each London borough and Greater London as a whole and (V) each regional authority and borough in Scotland.

Mr. Oppenheim: As the information is contained in a number of tables, I will write to the hon. Member and place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many workers are on (a) part-time contracts and (b) short-term full-time contracts; and, for each category, how many are (i) female and (ii) male; and if he will further break down the figures by standard region.

Mr. Oppenheim: Information is available from the labour force survey on the numbers of part-time and full-time employees who report that they are working under a contract for a fixed period or for a fixed task.

The information for spring 1994 is shown in the following table.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if children under 15 currently working in factories and businesses are included in his Department's statistics as employed persons.

Mr. Oppenheim: The labour force survey measure of employment only includes persons of age 16 years and over. Employment estimates derived from the employer-based survey make no reference to the age of the employee.

Mrs. Peacock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment to what he attributes the current changes in unemployment figures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Unemployment has fallen faster in the United Kingdom over the past year than in any other EU country, and has fallen by over 450,000 since recovery in the labour market began. On internationally comparable figures, released last week by the Statistical Office of the European Communities, the unemployment rate in the United Kingdom is nearly two percentage points below the EU average. I attribute this to the pursuit of sound macro-economic policies promoting strong economic growth with low inflation, active measures to help people back to work and the avoidance or removal of unnecessary regulations that obstruct enterprise, competition, and job creation.

Youth Training

Mr. Heppell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what changes there have been in the number of 16 and 17-year-olds on youth training schemes, nationally, regionally and in Nottingham in the last year.

Mr. Paice: The information requested is given in the following table.

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in the United Kingdom have either education or training places; and what the figures were in 1979.

Mr. Portillo: Some 1.1 million 16 and 17-year-olds in the United Kingdom were participating in education and training in spring 1994 compared with 1 million in spring 1984—the earliest year for which information is available. This represents an increase from 54 per cent. to 84 per cent. of the age group as a whole.

Mr. Bellingham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he next expects to meet the chairman of the Construction Industry training board to discuss youth training on construction sites.

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State met the Construction Industry Training Board chairman recently and discussed youth training and other matters. There are no plans to meet him again in the near future.

Older Workers

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what initiatives his Department has undertaken to improve the training prospects of older workers.

Miss Widdecombe: Our "Getting On" campaign encourages employers to develop and train their staff regardless of age.

Unemployed older people are eligible for all the Government's employment and training programmes according to normal criteria.

Priority Suppliers Scheme

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the latest position on the priority suppliers scheme.

Miss Widdecombe: The Government were forced to abolish the priority suppliers scheme because it was incompatible with EC law. The European Commission has confirmed that the PSS was illegal and could not be continued. The Government undertook to discuss the matter with the European Commission and to reintroduce a scheme if that was possible.

In the discussions with the European Commission the Government have sought to establish whether any preferential purchase arrangements for Remploy and other sheltered workshops can be operated within the law.

We have just concluded our talks with the Commission. A new scheme can be introduced but it has to be different from the PSS in two ways. First, to conform with treaty requirements, access to the scheme has to be extended beyond British suppliers to comparable ones in every country of the European Union and the European economic area. "Comparability" will be defined by reference to eligibility criteria which broadly reflect our own criteria for funding supported workshops. Those include requirements that the organisation be a non-profit-distributing body; at least 50 per cent. of its work force must be severely disabled employees engaged in work which makes a genuine contribution to the organisations's business; and employees must be paid the same or closely equivalent wages as non-disabled employees doing the same or similar work. To enable workshops in all member states—which satisfy these criteria—to register their interest, an announcement will be made annually in the EC Official Journal.

The second change is that the scheme will have to be confined to contracts below the relevant threshold above which the EC directives—93/36/EEC and 92/50/EEC—and the general agreement on tariffs and trade Government procurement agreement apply. Those thresholds are currently £96,403 for Government supplies contracts and £149,728 for some textiles products purchased by the Ministry of Defence.

The new arrangement, which will be known as the special contracts arrangement, will like its predecessor help eligible supported workshops for severely disabled people to compete for business with United Kingdom Government Departments and their agencies: it will be administered by the Employment Service, which will circulate to Departments and their agencies details of the organisations registered under the scheme, and their products. When awarding contracts covered by this scheme, Departments will be expected to award a contract to an eligible contractor if its tender provides the same value for money as the best rival tender, and provided all other tender requirements are acceptable. Where a tender was unacceptable on price alone there would, as under the previous scheme, be an opportunity to submit a revised tender for part or all of a contract.

Although we believe that the special contracts arrangement will be of some benefit, there remains the more fundamental problem of increasing competitive pressure, particularly in the textiles and clothing trade, from low cost producers beyond the EC. We shall continue to work with Remploy and other supported employers as they adapt to meet the challenges of the changing business environment.

The fact that we needed to end the PSS has never put in question the Government's commitment to make payment to Remploy or similar bodies to compensate them for the extra cost of employing disabled people. That is a principle to which we remain committed. The sum of more than £140 million that the Government make available for the supported employment programme has never been in doubt.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Ms Hodge: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment when he last met representatives of the training and enterprise councils to discuss TEC budgets.

Mr. Paice: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State and I regularly meet the TECs representatives to discuss a wide range of topics, including TEC budgets.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what progress is being made with the arrangements to introduce three-year licences for TECs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Paice: I am pleased to be able to announce that 12 training and enterprise councils have completed the process of meeting the rigorous standards we set for the award of the new 3-year licence. The licences will be effective from April 1995. The TECs are:

Barnsley/Doncaster
HAWTEC—Hereford and Worcester
Humberside
Leicestershire
Lincolnshire
North Derbyshire
North Nottinghamshire
Northumberland
Rotherham
Sheffield
South and East Cheshire
Sunderland City

A number of other TECs are close to completing the process. I expect to make further announcements shortly of TECs to be awarded licences from April 1995.

Our expectation is that the introduction of licensing for all English TECs will take until 1997. Licensing is one part of the contract framework between Government and TECs which is designed to support continuous improvement in their performance, value for money and accountability across all that they do.

To be awarded a licence, a TEC must meet rigorous criteria. These cover the TECs corporate plan and its strategic impact in working with other local bodies, its performance on the main programmes funded by the Government and other areas of its capability as an organisation.

Unemployment

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the reduction in unemployment in (a) Britain and (b) other major EU countries.

Mr. Oppenheim: The latest internationally comparable statistics from Eurostat show that the fall in the United Kingdom's unemployment rate over the past year has been greater than in any other country in the European Union.

Statistics and Research

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much money his Department will spend this year on statistics and research.

Mr. Oppenheim: The running costs and programme expenditure of statistical services division and economics, research and evaluation division in Employment Department headquarters amount to £23.8 million in 1994–95.

Not all this total relates to the collection of information or pure research. A significant proportion of the work of the divisions concerned involved the provision of statistical and economic advice and also evaluation.

Crown Enforcement Notices

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many inspections have been carried out into Crown premises in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available; and what assessment he has made of the reasons for trends in the number of Crown enforcement notices requiring improvements within the meaning of his answer of 12 July, Official Report, column 535.

Mr, Oppenheim: Information is not available on the number of inspections of Crown premises. There was a significant reduction in the number of Crown enforcement notices in 1986–87 when Crown immunity was removed from the national health service.

Psychological Testing

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what studies his Department has undertaken into the use of psychological testing for employment.

Mr. Oppenheim: In the late 1980s, the Department published the policy document "Assessment Through Psychological Testing". Subsequently, we published the report "Review of Psychometric Tests for Assessment in Vocational Training", which is now maintained by the British Psychological Society.

We have also funded two studies of employers' recruitment practices in relation to young people, which were completed in 1992 and 1993 respectively. These studies "The Selection of Young People by Medium Sized and Large Organisations" and "The Recruitment and Selection of Young People by Small Firms", both included psychological testing among the range of recruitment practices covered.

In addition, we are funding a project in the Tower Hamlets area on psychometric testing and the ethnic minorities. This is currently in progress.

Output-related Funding

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the reply, 21 Novermber, Official Report, column 42, how many representations he has received, and how many were in favour and how many against output-related funding.

Mr. Paice: It is not possible to quantify the number of representations, which have been made from many quarters over many years. Although some representations have drawn attention to potential difficulties, there has been much support, particularly from training and enterprise councils.

European Court

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement about the implications for Britain of the judgment of the European Court in the case of Raymond van der Elst and the French Office des Migrations Internationale.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Employment Department, together with the Home Office, is considering the judgment of the European Court in this case and any implications there may be for the United Kingdom.

Graduates

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list numbers and percentages of unemployed graduates by subject group since 1979 to date, broken down by gender.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The table provides the data requested for alternate years up to 1992 and for 1993. The data have been compiled from annual reports published by the Universities Statistical Record on surveys of the first destinations of new graduates. They refer to the position of graduates at the end of the calender year in which they graduated and they exclude graduates from institutions which did not have university status prior to 1992.

Maternity Leave

Mr. David Porter: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what is the definition of other contractual benefits besides salary for a woman on 14 weeks maternity leave under regulations in force since 16 October; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Oppenheim [holding answer 28 November 1994]: A woman absent from work on statutory maternity leave is entitled to the benefit of the terms and conditions of employment which would have been applicable to her if she had not been absent, with the exception of remuneration. This is under section 33 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978 as inserted by section 23 of the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993.

ENVIRONMENT

Local Authority Debt

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the current level of debt for each local authority in Greater Manchester, the current figure for each year since 1987–88 and the totals for the whole Greater Manchester metropolitan area.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information is as follows:

Outstanding debt at end of year

	1987–88	1988–89	1989–90	1990–91	1991–92	[1]1992–93	£ million 1993–94

Total	3,183	3,188	—	3,381	3,538	3,045	2,937

Note:

In addition, debt inherited from the former Greater Manchester county council amounts to £260 million.

[1] The debt of most housing authorities was reduced in 1992–93 as the result of the commutation of certain loan charge grants in October 1992.

Under-occupation

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent of under-occupation in (a) the rented and (b) owner-occupied sectors.

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the extent of under-occupation in the (a) rented and (b) owner-occupied sectors.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The latest estimates for England are as follows:

Households with more bedrooms than the bedroom standard 1993-94

Thousands

Tenure	Number of bedrooms more than bedroom standard
	One	Two	Three or more
Tenants	2,120	810	70
Owner-occupiers	5,450	4,300	980

These figures are from the 1993–94 survey of English housing and are subject to sampling error.

Homelessness Data

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what research he has done into the accuracy of homelessness data used by his Department in the standard spending assessment formula.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department is currently undertaking research on the impact of the 1991 homelessness code of guidance. One of the areas covered by this research is the consistency of authorities' statistical returns.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from local authorities about the accuracy and appropriateness of using homelessness figures as an indicator within the standard spending assessment formula.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Since the 1994–95 settlement, the following local authorities have made representations on the use of homelessness data:

Coventry city council
Dudley metropolitan borough council
London borough of Newham
London borough of Hounslow
London borough of Islington
Avon county council
Barrow borough council

Uniform Business Rate

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of appeals outstanding against the 1988 uniform business rate valuation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: At the end of September, there were around 235,000 1990 non-domestic rating appeals outstanding with valuation tribunals in England, the vast majority of which were made after the initial appeal period to reflect changes in material circumstances.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to deregulate the radioactive nuclear waste industry and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: Proposed changes to the regulatory responsibilities of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food were contained in paragraph 194 of the Department's consultation paper "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", published in August. Copies were placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the 39 dump sites identified as suitable for placing low-level radioactive nuclear waste.

Mr. Atkins: A recent press release by Greenpeace listed 37 landfill sites which are, or have in the past, received low-level radioactive waste for disposal by controlled burial. Ten of these sites are in Scotland and the information relating to Scotland is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland. Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution currently monitors and publicly reports upon the remaining 27 sites in England and Wales. A number of these sites are now closed or do not now receive radioactive waste for disposal. The sites which are specified in the authorisations issued under the Radioactive Substances Act 1993, and which currently receive such waste are listed

Milton Landfill, Cambridge
Cowpen Bewley Tip, Cleveland
Waste Ponds, Walney Island, Cumbria
Hilts Quarry, Derbyshire
Magnesium Elktron site, Greater Manchester
Cilgwyn Quarry, Gwynedd
Braziers Landfill, Hertfordshire
SCM Chemicals site, Humberside
Clifton Marsh, Lancashire
Sefton Meadows Tip, Merseyside
Beighton Tip, South Yorkshire
Beddingham Quarry, Sussex

Four of these 12 sites receive low-level radioactive waste from premises licensed under the Nuclear Installations Act 1965, and which are local to the site of burial. The remaining sites receive waste generated by activities which are not a part of the nuclear industry, most commonly hospitals and universities.

Authority to make controlled burials is granted only after a comprehensive assessment of waste producer's application and of the site it proposes. There are no outstanding applications for authorisation to make controlled burials of waste generated at nuclear sites, or for additional producers of waste to make consignments to sites currently used by others.

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration has been given to (a) dry storage at the site of production and (b) other alternative methods of dumping of radioactive nuclear waste.

Mr. Atkins: A consultation document containing the preliminary conclusions of the Government's review of radioactive waste management policy was published in August and copies placed in the Library of the House. The responses are now being considered and a statement of future policy will be made in due course.

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what responses his Department has received to the consultation document "Review of Radioactive Waste Management Policy: Preliminary Conclusions", published on 5 August 1994.

Mr. Atkins: The Department has received more than 250 responses to the consultation document. A list of these has been placed in the Library of the House and copies of individual responses may be obtained through the Library. In addition, we have received over 5,000 letters from members of the public following campaigns by Greenpeace. All the points raised are receiving careful consideration.

Anti-social Tenants

Mr. Thurnham : To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to encourage local authorities to make use of injunctions and civil actions to deal with anti-social tenants in council housing.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Government encourage local authorities to develop a variety of strategies and practices to deal with anti-social behaviour, which include the use of injunctions and other appropriate remedies.

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what powers local authorities have to evict anti-social tenants.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Local authorities have powers under the Housing Act 1985 to evict anti-social tenants. Breaking tenancy agreements and causing a nuisance to neighbours are among the grounds for taking repossession action.

Fly Posting

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to introduce legislation to allow the organisers of events advertised through fly posting to be prosecuted.

Sir Paul Beresford: It is an immediate offence, under section 224 of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990 and regulation 27 of the Town and Country Planning (Control of Advertisements) Regulations 1992, to display an advertisement without the prior consent of the owner of the land, or premises, on which it is displayed. The maximum penalty on summary conviction of this offence is £1,000 with a daily penalty of £100 for a continuing offence. Paragraphs 51 and 52 of the annex to Department of the Environment circular 5/92 advise local planning authorities on effective prosecution procedures for fly posting.

Convention on International Trade in Endangered Species

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has on the current levels of elephant products stockpiled by range states and affected by CITES regulations.

Sir Paul Beresford: The most recent information is contained in a paper by Tom Milliken of TRAFFIC East/South Africa, prepared for the meeting organised by the United Kingdom on behalf of the European Community and held in Kasane, Botswana from 19 to 23 September 1994. He estimates that the total volume of raw ivory held in the African range states is of the order of 500 tonnes. There is no quantified information on stockpiles of other elephant products, although South Africa does hold a stockpile of elephant hides. Copies of the report of the Kasane meeting and the background paper mentioned are in the Library.

London Government

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment who governs London; and what is their authority to do so.

Sir Paul Beresford: The provision of public services in Greater London and its government is carried out by central Government Departments, centrally appointed bodies, the 32 London boroughs and the corporation of the City of London, and London-wide local government bodies. The authority for these bodies' responsibilities is conferred by legislation.

Directorships

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 70, what rules apply to prevent possible conflicts of interest in cases where serving officials in his Department have held directorships in companies as part of the staff development programme involving contact between Whitehall and business.

Mr. Robert B Jones: Officials are not nominated for non-executive directorships of companies whose sector of business is the concern of their management or policy responsibilities in the Department. If they are posted to new official duties which create such a conflict of interest, they resign the directorship. In common with all members of staff, officials holding non-executive directorships are required to observe the Department's rules of conduct governing the use of official information and experience, and the avoidance of conflicts of interest or the appearance of such conflicts; in particular, they should as directors declare an interest and withdraw from discussion of any dealings between the company concerned and the Department, and within the Department they should declare an interest and withdraw from any involvement in official business involving that company. In order to avoid personal financial interest officials do not receive fees for their directorships; in cases where fees are payable, they are surrendered to the Exchequer.

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 70, what considerations underlay the decision not to keep records of the public limited companies to which he refers.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The corporate status of the host organisation has not been relevant to the staff development objectives of non-executive directorships, which have been held in a variety of organisations, some not being companies. However, in all cases the same rules governing the avoidance of conflicts of interest have applied.

Planning Appeals

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consideration he gives to local authority unitary development plans when he arbitrates on planning permission appeals in respect of the turning down by local authorities of applications to develop open-cast mining sites; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: If the development plan is relevant, my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State must determine the appeal in accordance with the plan unless material considerations indicate otherwise. This is a statutory duty under section 54A of the Town and Country Planning Act 1990, the operation of which is explained in planning policy guidance note 1, "General Policy and Principles", a copy of which is held in the Library.

Rented Homes

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total output of rented homes by housing associations and local authorities in the current year; what was the figure for 1978–79; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Housing associations are now the main providers of new social housing. Local authorities primary housing tasks are now the efficient management of their own stock of housing and enabling other organisations to provide new housing. In England during 1978–79 local authorities completed 76,500 dwellings and new towns completed a further 8,000 new dwellings; during 1993–94 local authorities completed 1,400 new dwellings and by 1994–95 we expect this may have fallen to less than 1,000.

Housing associations provide additional rented homes through new build and through rehabilitation. In England during 1978–79 they provided some 33,600 new rented homes in this way. We currently forecast that in 1994–95 housing associations will provide 41,800 new rented homes through the Housing Corporation's approved development programme. We also estimate that local authority supported housing association activity will provide in the region of 10,000 new homes in 1994–95.

In addition, the cash incentive scheme for local authority tenants; the tenants incentive scheme, for housing association tenants; and the 60 per cent of do-it-yourself shared ownership help social sector tenants to become owner-occupiers and so free up existing properties for re-letting to new tenants. These schemes were not in existence in 1978–79. We currently estimate that in 1994–95 some 13,000 new housing association and local authority lettings will be provided in this way.

Orimulsion

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received regarding the burning of orimulsion in power stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: We have received no representations about the burning of orimulsion in power stations this calendar year.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what is his estimate of the non-domestic rate poundage for next year;

(2) if he has decided the details of the transitional arrangements to phase in the effects of the 1995 revaluation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The 1995 revaluation will not lead to any significant change in overall rateable value in England. We therefore propose to set the poundage for England next year at 43.2p, in line with the increase in the retail prices index in the year to September 1994.

However, the revaluation will result in significant local and sectoral shifts in rateable values. My Department's consultation paper, published last month, outlined proposals for transitional arrangements to phase in the effects of these shifts on rate bills. In the light of responses to that paper, and the generous package of support announced by my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor today, I now propose that no business will face year on year increases of more than 10 per cent., after allowing for inflation. For property with a new rateable value of less than £10,000—£15,000 in London—the maximum real increase will be 7.5 per cent., while for many small shops combined with living accommodation, the corresponding limit will be 5 per cent.

We estimate that nearly 1 million smaller properties and 250,000 million larger properties in England will benefit from relief. One third of beneficiaries will be shops. A further 170,000 properties will see reductions in their bills as a result of the revaluation. I am sure this will be widely welcomed by the business community.

The Exchequer contribution will cover part of the cost of the scheme. The remaining element will be met by limiting real reductions in rates bills, as proposed in the consultation paper. For 1995–96, the limits will be 10 per cent. for small properties and 5 per cent. for large ones.

Other details of the scheme will be as proposed in the consultation paper. Regulations giving effect to these changes will be laid before Parliament shortly.

Mr. Merchant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for the appropriate level of aggregate local authority spending in 1995–96, and the level of central support for that spending.

Mr. Gummer: I propose that total standard spending for 1995–96 should be £43.51 billion for England. This represents an increase of £930 million—2.2 per cent.—compared with this year's figure, including the amount for transitional community care special grant and provision for local government reorganisation transitional costs. Excluding community care and reorganisation, this still represents a cash increase of 0.8 per cent.

I propose that the level of aggregate external finance distributed to local authorities in 1995–96 should be £34.67 billion. This represents an increase of £430 million—1.2 per cent.—compared with this year's figure, including community care. Net of community care, this represents a cash decrease of 0.4 per cent.

I also propose that the national non-domestic rate poundage for 1995–96 in England should rise to 43.2p, reflecting this year's revaluation and the annual increase in the retail prices index to September. This will ensure that the benefit of the government's success in tackling inflation will once again be passed on in full to businesses.

I propose to set the distributable amount of non-domestic rates at £11.35 billion. I propose that the total of revenue support grant should be £18.32 billion. Special and specific grants within AEF will amount to £5 billion.

I shall announce shortly my proposals for the distribution of Government grants, including my proposals for changes in the standard spending assessment methodology. At the same time, I shall announce my capping intentions. I shall also set out my proposals for the third year of the scheme of transitional assistance to those households which faced particularly significant increases in their local tax bills following the introduction of the council tax.

It is essential that local and central Government continue to play their part in restraining expenditure. Our overriding priority is to reduce the public sector deficit. My proposals for total standard spending, aggregate external finance and the non-domestic rate poundage represent a balanced approach to the funding of local authority services in 1995–96. I look to local authorities to take the same responsible attitude in determining their spending priorities and setting their budgets in 1995–96. However, in the context of a tough settlement, I am confident that with efficient housekeeping and efficient collection of the council tax, these proposals will allow local authorities to maintain their current levels of spending and carry out their functions.

Consultants

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what employment consultants were engaged between 1 January 1990 and 30 April 1992 by his Department or organisations responsible to it; for what posts; and when these posts were filled.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This information is not available centrally for non-departmental posts, and could not be assembled without disproportionate cost. Within the Department, the consultants used, posts to be filled and dates are as follows:

Douglas Llambias Associates
Chief Executive, The Buying Agency; filled 31 October 1991;

Goddard Kay Rogers Associates Ltd.
Chief Economist, Department of the Environment; filled 3 February 1992;

MSL International
Chief Executive, the Planning Inspectorate; filled 1 January 1992;

NB Selection Ltd.
Chief Executive, Royal Parks agency; filled 16 March 1992. Responsibility for this agency subsequently transferred to the Department of National Heritage.

Saxton Bampflyde International plc
Director, Property Holdings; filled 10 December 1990. Director and Chief Inspector, Her Majesty's Inspectorate of pollution; filled 1 May 1991. Chief Executive, Queen Elizabeth II Conference Centre; filled 16 March 1992.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the contractual price agreed between the London residuary body and the Shirayama Corporation for the scale of the riverside building in the country hall complex; and how much of the sale price has now been received by the London residuary body.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The terms of the sale—including the sale price—of the riverside building of county hall were a matter of commercial confidentiality between the London residuary body and the purchaser. Some £50 million of the purchase price was distributed by the LRB to the London boroughs in proportion to the total populations of each borough in accordance with the London Government Reorganisation (Capital Money)(Greater London) (Amendment) Order 1993.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects the remaining parts of the County hall complex to be sold; what is the estimated value of the unsold parts; and how much has been spent by the London residuary body in marketing the site.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The London residuary body has announced that the sale of the remainder of the county hall site is to be completed on 29 March 1995 and that the agreed purchase price is £17.5 million. The cost of marketing the site is a matter for the LRB.

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what have been the maintenance costs of county hall over the past two years; and how much relates to the riverside building.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

London Residuary Body

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment to which property or properties the £10 million deferred capital receipt appearing in the London residuary body accounts for 1993–94 relates; and when he expects the receipt to be available for distribution to the London boroughs.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: This is a matter for the London residuary body.

TRANSPORT

Railways

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what is the current value of domestic and other properties acquired by the British Railways Board in pursuance of the building of a high-speed railway line between London and Dolland's Moor, broken down by (a) present market valuations, (b) cost of purchase and (c) present written down value in the books of (i) the British Railways Board, (ii) European Passenger Services Ltd. and (iii) any other public sector body;

(2) how many properties were acquired by the British Railways Board in each borough or district along the route of the proposed high-speed railway line between London and Dolland's Moor; what was the cost of these acquisitions; how many properties have been subsequently disposed of and at what value; and what was the cost of the properties so disposed of.

Mr. Watts: All properties acquired in advance of need for the present channel tunnel rail link have been purchased by Union Railways, an agency company wholly owned by the British Railways Board. The present market value and present book value is £13.9 million. Total purchase cost, including home loss and disturbance payments, where appropriate, was £38.8 million. The cost and number of these purchases by local authority area is:

Local authority	Cost (£ million)	Number
Shepway	6.1	42
Ashford	16.7	111
Maidstone	9.6	54
Tonbridge and Malling	0.3	2
Camden	6.1	2

None of these properties has been sold.

Disabled Drivers

Mr. David Atkinson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if orange badges for disabled drivers issued by one local authority are accepted by others; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Orange badges are valid throughout England, Scotland and Wales, except in the City of London, the city of Westminster, the royal borough of Kensington and Chelsea and a part of the London borough of Camden. Badges are also accepted under a similar parking scheme operating in Northern Ireland. In addition, access to certain town centres may be prohibited or limited to vehicles with special permits in addition to the orange badge.

Commercial Vehicles (Testing)

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration his Department has given to the introduction of a legal requirement that the large goods vehicle test be carried out on a fully laden vehicle.

Mr. Norris: We have considered the possibility of requiring large goods vehicles to be tested fully laden, most recently in the context of the initiative to facilitate a significant expansion of the arrangements for on-site testing by Vehicle Inspectorate staff at operators' own premises. We have concluded that this would impose an unnecessary cost burden on the road haulage industry.

Rail Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by British Rail network those passenger train services that have not met their punctuality targets during the last 12 months.

Mr. Watts: Of British Rail's 52 route groups, the following have not met their punctuality targets over the 12-month period ending 11 November:

South east routes
- LTS Rail
- Northampton Lines
- North London Lines
- Kent Link
- South London Lines
- Sussex Coast
- Great Northern

InterCity routes
- Gatwick Express
- Cross Country
- East Coast
- Midland Mainline
- West Coast

Regional routes
- Merseyrail City Line
- West Yorkshire Short
- Lancashire Local
- Manchester Local
- North Wales Branches
- ScotRail East
- ScotRail Central
- Avon
- Central Inter Urban
- Mid Wales & Marches
- Transpennine

Red Routes

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the purposes of red routes.

Mr. Norris: The aims of the red routes are set out in chapter 5 of "Traffic Management and Parking Guidance", local authority circular 5/92. A copy of the circular is in the Library.

Buses (Disabled Access)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the outcome of his negotiations with the European Commission for a directive to ensure that future generations of new buses will be more accessible to disabled people; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: We have pressed for a number of changes to the proposed draft directive in the interests of safety, accessibility and the needs of bus and coach manufacturers and operators. We are currently awaiting revised proposals. Our aim, which we shall be taking forward in future discussions on the directive, is to ensure that low-floor buses are introduced where technically feasible.

Severn Bridge

Mr. Marland: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the increase in the number of heavy goods vehicles using the (a) A48, (b) A40, (c) B4136 and (d) B4215/4221 heading towards the Severn bridge since one-way tolls on the Severn bridge have been imposed.

Mr. Watts: In April and May this year, Gloucestershire county council carried out a traffic survey for the Highways Agency which indicated that 575 more heavy goods vehicles than would be expected, allowing for traffic growth, were travelling westbound on roads through Gloucestershire per 24-hour day. The increases by individual roads were: (a) A48, 200 HGVs; (b) A40/A4136, 200 HGVs; and, (c) B4215/B4221, 175 HGVs. The eastbound HGV flows on these roads were slightly less than would have been expected.

Not all the extra vehicles could be positively identified as avoiding the Severn bridge because of the one-way tolls.

Transport Supplementary Grant

Mr. Roy Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the bids made by each local authority in England for transport supplementary grant for 1995–96 broken down into (a) major highway schemes—eligible for TSG, (b) structural maintenance on carriageways, (c) structural maintenance on bridges, (d) major public transport projects, (e) minor works-highways and public transport, (f) minor works-local safety schemes and (g) parking.

Mr. Norris: The figures are shown in the following table:

Marine Pollution

Mr. Harris: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport, when he expects the Government to publish their detailed response to the report of Lord Donaldson's inquiry into the prevention of marine pollution from merchant shipping.

Mr. Norris: Work is well advanced in taking forward the report's recommendations and in preparing a response. We believe that it makes sense to delay publication to take account of current developments in the European Community and in the International Maritime Organisation. As a consequence, we now hope to publish the response in the new year.

Railways (Finance)

Mr. McLoughlin: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what external finance limit has been set for the railway industry for 1994–95; and what estimate he has made of Government grant support for 1994–95.

Mr. Watts: The external finance limit for the railway industry as a whole has now been set at £1,496 million. This represents an increase of £259 million on previous plans. The increase is met either from reallocations within existing Department of Transport programmes or from the reserve and does not therefore add to the planned total of public expenditure.

The British Rail and Railtrack EFLs have been set, respectively, at contributions of £272 million and £333 million and European Passenger Services EFL at a requirement of £177 million. Grant support, comprising franchising director and metropolitan railway grant, is estimated to be £1,924 million. Any further adjustments will be notified to Parliament.

A2

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport pursuant to his answer of 21 November, Official Report, column 19, what arrangements he proposes for consulting the public on the proposed A2 Lydden-Dover improvement scheme; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: I am pleased to announce that public consultation on this scheme will start at the end of this week with the local distribution of brochures describing the proposed improvement. Public exhibitions will be held on 9 and 10 December at Dover district council offices to give the public the opportunity of discussing the proposals with representatives of the Highways Agency and their consultants.

Those wishing to comment on the proposals are invited to write to the Highways Agency before the end of the consultation period on 3 February.

Transport Council

Mr. Raymond S. Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what was the result of the Transport Council held in Brussels on 21 and 22 November.

Dr. Mawhinney: The Transport Council met in Brussels on 21 and 22 November. It agreed a resolution on ferry safety, calling for a number of detailed initiatives at International Maritime Organisation and Community level.

A common position was reached on a directive giving the force of European Community law to the Paris memorandum of understanding on port state control, which lays down rules for state inspection of foreign ships. At my request, the council agreed to call on the Commission to work with the countries of the Paris MOU group to monitor the standard of shipping in EC ports and to report back to the council within a year with proposals for tougher measures as necessary.

A draft directive on mandatory reporting by ships—EUROREP—was discussed. Much of the text was agreed by the council, but the key issues of concern to the United Kingdom—finalising reporting lines, adoption of EUROREP by the IMO and the directive's date of entry into force—were referred back to the committee of permanent representatives for further discussion.

The Commission outlined a proposal to consider granting individual exemptions from competition rules to groups of shipping companies that offer multimodal rates, provided they improve the efficiency of their land-side operations. Some member states supported the proposal. I, supported by a number of other delegations, pressed for the proposal to be considered afresh, in consultation with the commercial parties involved and with our major trading partners. In the absence of consensus, the presidency concluded that the position should be closely monitored; that the council should be consulted immediately if there were any unforeseen difficulties; that the transition to the new approach should be conducted in a reasonable and flexible manner; and that in any event the Commission should report to the council on experience with the new approach.

The council also formally adopted three measures on which it had previously reached a common position: a directive on the training and certification of seafarers, a directive on rules and standards for classification societies and a regulation on port fees for oil tankers.

The council agreed a resolution calling for a European contribution to the development of a global satellite navigation system.

It agreed that consideration of the negotiating mandates for aviation and land transport agreements and Switzerland should be resumed immediately, with a view to agreeing them, at the latest, at the next Transport Council in March 1995.

There was an exchange of views on the scope of a draft directive on the interoperability of the high-speed train network. The matter was referred back to Coreper for further discussion.

The council discussed a proposed directive on the appointment of dangerous goods advisers by companies concerned with the transport of dangerous goods. The United Kingdom, supported by a number of other delegations, questioned the need for such a directive. A compromise proposal was referred back to Coreper for further discussion.

The council also discussed trans-European networks, air traffic management, road transport negotiations with eastern European countries and measures to help Community shipping. No votes were necessary.

Bedford

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) how many letters he has received from the Bedford area on the desirability of urgently completing the bypassing arrangements for the town;

(2) how many vehicles of all descriptions cross the (a) Newnham bridge, (b) Bedford Town bridge and (c) Prebend Street bridge in Bedford daily;

(3) what he estimates to be the cost of constructing a mile of motorway; and what were the figures (a) 10 and (b) 20 years ago.

Mr. Watts: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Sir Trevor Skeet, dated 29 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Questions about road schemes in Bedfordshire since these are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I will answer your questions in the order in which they appeared on the Order Papers for 22 and 23 November.

22 November 1994

35. The inclusion in the national roads programme of a bypass for any town is not dependent solely upon the size of that urban area. When assessing the inclusion of a potential scheme the Department must have particular regard to the benefits to local people, the levels of strategic traffic that will be removed from the town and to the benefits that will accrue to the national roads network.

The roads programme includes bypass schemes for several other towns around the country that are of a similar size to Bedford, including Hastings, Wigan, Gateshead and Carlisle.

36. The £38 million contract for the Bedford Southern Bypass, began in August this year and we expect the new road to open to traffic in Summer 1996.

With regard to other parts of the full bypass, in April this year the Secretary of State for Transport announced the outcome of his Review of the roads programme which examined the relative merits, in terms of economic costs and benefits, environmental impact, and the contribution of trunk road schemes to the strategic network. The Review concluded that the proposals for Bedford are in the main sufficiently important to be taken forward but that there are other schemes nationally that are considered to require a higher priority.

The A428–A421 element of the Bedford Western Bypass has been placed in the longer term category and will be developed by the Agency as the road programme rolls forward. A consortium of local development interests has however suggested that they could provide, at their own expense, a single carriageway link along the protected corridor for the bypass between the A428 and A421 as part of new development for which planning permission has been sought. Progress on the new scheme would depend on the decisions on the planning application.

As you are aware, a public inquiry to hear objections to the proposals for the Norse Road link element of the Bedford Southern Bypass has been arranged for January next year. Progress on the scheme beyond that stage would be dependent upon the inquiry Inspector's Report and the joint decision of the Secretaries of State for Transport and for the Environment.

The Agency will progress these schemes as quickly as circumstances allow but their implementation is subject to the completion of the remaining statutory procedures and to the availability of resources.

37. The Agency is not able to calculate a figure for any financial loss incurred by Bedford because it does not yet have a Bypass. We can, however, give an estimate of the benefits which would accrue generally from its construction and the relief it provides to the existing road network. Our cost/benefit computer programme (COBA) is used to calculate a monetary figure, which compares the cost of a new road with travel benefits, such as journey time, vehicle operating costs, and reduction in accidents. The figures are calculated over a 30 year period and discounted. A strongly positive figure represents good value for money.

For the Bedford Southern Bypass the benefits could be as much as +£82.7 million, for Bedford Western Bypass +£41.1 million and for the Norse Road Link +£13.0 million. I emphasise that these figures represent the benefit accruing globally, not just to the towns or villages bypassed.

38. Our forecasts suggest that traffic flows on the completed Bedford Southern Bypass will range between 17,000 to 23,000 vehicles (24 hour Average Annual Daily Traffic) along the length of the scheme. This information is taken from the latest traffic model that is being prepared for use at the Norse Road Link public inquiry.

The Southern Bypass will include a full grade separated junction with the A6 trunk road south of the town in order to allow easy access for traffic between the two routes. From this point the existing A6 route through Bedford will be available for traffic travelling to and from the north.

39. In the past ten years £31,085,158 has been spent on trunk road schemes in northern Bedfordshire, £43,577,768 has been spent in the south of the County and £59,560,890 on the maintenance and on small improvements to the trunk road and motorway network covering Bedforshire as a whole. In addition, we make allocations to the County for their major schemes. Recent examples are the A5065 Luton Dunstable Relief Road, the A507 Shefford, Clifton, Henlow Bypass, the A422 Stagsden Bypass and the A507 Arlesey Stotfold Bypass. We also made significant contributions to the reconstruction of the County and Longholme Bridges at Bedford.

23 November 1994

35. By 24 November 1994, the Secretary of State for Transport had received 55 letters from local people, organisations and companies in response to the current "Getting Bedford Moving" campaign. A reply will be sent to all those who have written.

36. Traffic flows recorded on the 3 bridges in Bedford are:

(a) Newnham Bridge: 30,600

(b) Bedford Town Bridge: 27,600

(c) Prebend Street Bridge: 28,400

(All vehicles, Average Annual Daily Traffic 1993)

37. The average cost of constructing a mile of motorway is about £7.6 million per mile, excluding VAT and design costs at 1992 prices. Using price indices we have calculated the equivalent cost 10 years ago to be about £6.6 million/mile and 20 years ago £2.11 million/mile.

Bedford (Road System)

Sir Trevor Skeet: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what towns of the size of Bedford or larger remain without by-passes in England;

(2) what are his plans for the completion of the full bypass for Bedford;

(3) what he assesses to be the loss incurred by Bedford as a result of the inability of its road infrastructure to cope with the traffic;

(4) how many vehicles the southern route in Bedford is expected to carry when completed; and how he expects vehicles to reach the A6 from the route travelling north;

(5) how much money has been allocated for major roads (a) in the south of the county of Bedfordshire and (b) in the north of the county during the past 10 years.

Mr. Watts [holding answers 28 November 1994]: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the Chief Executive to write to my hon. Friend.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Public Bodies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will give a full list of all persons appointed to public bodies identifying the salary paid and known political allegiances.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: Such information is not held centrally. Details of the remuneration of full and part-time public appointments are given in "Public Bodies 1993", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Details of political allegiance of persons appointed are not sought.

Crown Servants

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will name the current members of the Advisory Committee on the Acceptance of Business Appointments by Crown Servants, indicating their occupation and background and which other public and private sector board posts they hold.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The members of the Prime Minister's Advisory Committee on Business Appointments are:

The right hon. the Lord Carlisle of Bucklow QC - Chairman
The Lord Bridges GCMG - Deputy Chairman
Sir John Blelloch KCB
Sir Denys Henderson
Sir Charles Huxtable KCB CBE
Sir Robin Ibbs KBE
The right hon. Peter Shore MP
The right hon. the Lord Thomson of Monifieth KT

Lord Carlisle, Lord Thomson and Mr. Peter Shore are senior parliamentarians and former Ministers, Lord Bridges is a retired diplomat; Sir John Blelloch is a retired senior civil servant; Sir Charles Huxtable is a retired senior Army officer; Sir Robin Ibbs is Chairman of Lloyds bank; Sir Denys Henderson is chairman of ICI and the ZENECA group.

Three members of the advisory committee hold public appointments in other advisory bodies sponsored by my Department: Sir John Blelloch is a member of the Security Commission; Lord Thomson is a member of the Political Honours Scrutiny Committee and the Standing Committee on Standards in Public Life; Mr Peter Shore is a member of the Standing Committee on Standards in Public Life.

Details of other public and private sector board posts held are a matter for individual committee members, and are not sought as a matter of course by my Department.

Animal Experiment

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster which of the events in the national week of science and technology, supported by his Department, will be dealing with the issue of animal experimentation.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The programme for next year's national week of science, engineering and technology will not be finalised until the new year. At present there are no events planned which deal with the issue of animal experimentation and which would be supported by my Department.

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Mans: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what are the expenditure plans of his Department in the period 1995–96 to 1997–98.

Mr. David Hunt: Provision for the Office of Public Service and Science, HMSO, Central Office of Information is £1,339 million in 1995–96, £1,357 million in 1996–97 and £1,386 million in 1997–98.

Planned expenditure on public service tasks—OPSS, HMSO, COI—is £54 million in 1995–96, £53 million in 1996–97 and £53 million in 1997–98.

Provision for science is £1,285 million in 1995–96, £1,304 million in 1996–97 and £1,333 million in 1997–98. As a result, the science budget, which is provision excluding EC funding to research council institutes, has been maintained in 1995–96 at its 1994–95 level in real terms, almost 2 per cent. above its level in 1993–94.

I shall be announcing the allocation of the 1995–96 science budget in due course.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences;

(2) to ask the Minister without Portfolio how much public money he will spend in his ministerial capacity on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season;

(3) to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by Government Whips in their offices and official residences including No. 12 Downing street.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply. Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. Such costs as relate to Cabinet Office, Office of Public Service and Science, Central Office of Information and Her Majesty's Stationery Office are covered in running costs expenditure, which is published in the annual report, copies of which are in the Libraries of the House.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year;

(2) to ask the Minister without Portfolio how many official Christmas cards he intends to send in 1994 in his ministerial capacity; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year;

(3) to ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many official Christmas cards the Government Whips intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Members, Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card the Chief Whip intends to send this year.

Mr. David Hunt: I have been asked to reply.

I shall write to the hon. member when the number of Christmas cards sent by my office is known, and will be glad to send him one and to place one in the Library. The Minister without Portfolio and the Government Whips do not have official Christmas cards.

Executive Agencies

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all executive agencies, their parent department and their date of establishment.

EDUCATION

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary for Education what steps he will take to avoid the creation of budgeting difficulties in colleges of further and higher education as a consequence of changes in the allocation of support from the single regeneration budget in 1995–96.

Mr. Boswell: The budgets of further and higher education colleges are matters for the institutions themselves and for the funding councils. If the hon. Member is aware of any particular difficulty, he should raise it with them in the first instance.

School Books

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what percentage of schools in (a) the primary and (b) the secondary sector spent (i) more than £1,000 and (ii) less than £500 on books in the years 1992–93 and 1993–94 and what are the projections for the financial years 1994–95 and 1995–96.

Mr. Robin Squire: Figures for expenditure on books by individual schools are not collected centrally.

Youth Service

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education from which lines of the local authority revenue outturn and revenue accounts returns the estimate of £220 million was made for local authority expenditure on the youth service which can be found in table 3 of the Department for Education and Office for Standards in Education departmental report.

Mr. Boswell: The estimate of £220 million for local authority spending on the youth service in 1993–94 was calculated by apportioning total local authority expenditure on education, as recorded on local authority revenue account returns for 1993–94, pro rata to the breakdown of spending in 1993–94 produced by the local authority associations as part of their 1993 report into education spending needs. The expenditure figures used in the calculation were taken from lines 1-11 and 77 of the RA returns. Income in respect of technical and vocational education initiative, WRFE, Polytechnics and Colleges Funding Council/Universities Funding Council payments, EC grants and other grants recorded on the same forms were then netted off.

Final outturn data for 1993–94 will not become available until next year. This is likely to be different from the estimate shown above. The latest outturn data available is for 1992–93. Local authority Revenue Outturn forms show that net recurrent spending on the youth service in that year was £274 million. The provisional 1992–93 figure shown in the 1994 DFE/Ofsted departmental report was £232 million.

Audit

Mr. Corbett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether she will include higher and further education establishments and teacher training colleges in her audit next year of accessibility of schools.

Mr. Boswell: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State will be asking the Further Education Funding Council to consider whether further information on accessibility to further education sector institutions is required in the light of its statutory responsibilities for students with disabilities. The remit letter sent to the Higher Education Funding Council for England on its establishment asked it to consider how access for students with special needs could be facilitated. It is for the Funding Council to decide what information it needs to collect in order to enable it to fulfil that remit and its other functions.

Expenditure Plans

Mr. Streeter: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement about her Department's expenditure plans for the financial years 1995–96 to 1997–98.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: As my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer announced in a statement today, the Department for Education and Ofsted's spending programme in 1995–96 will total £10,958 million. That total is £427 million or 4.1 per cent. higher than equivalent expenditure in 1994–95.

[1]Figures rounded as in the Financial Statement and Budget Report.

In a demanding public expenditure survey, the Government have had to look for greater efficiency and economy in the delivery of education, but they have maintained priority for this service within their spending plans. In particular, the Government have allowed for growth in the number of students in further education, have extended the scope of the specialist schools programme and have increased the level of support for capital expenditure on schools. Provision is made for continuing growth in the grant-maintained schools programme. As announced last year, participation in higher education has been stabilised at a level where almost one in three young people will be entering higher education. I am announcing measures to promote the private finance initiative in further and higher education; both sectors will be able, in collaboration with the private sector, to increase the planned level of capital work over the next few years.

The plans announced today do not cover the expansion which the Government intend to make in provision for children under five. There will be a further statement about that in due course.

Schools

Specialist Schools Programme

The Government's technology colleges programme has been an outstanding success. It is widening choice for parents, and helping to raise standards in the key subjects of technology, science and maths. Already 50 grant-maintained and voluntary aided schools have received matching funding under the programme from the Government and from private sponsors. As envisaged in the White Paper, "Choice and Diversity", I am now extending the initiative to foreign languages. I also intend to open the programme to county and other maintained secondary schools. Our plans include £15 million, £20 million and £25 million in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively to allow for the extension of the programme.

Capital Expenditure on Schools

Total central Government provision for capital expenditure on county, voluntary and grant-maintained schools is £621 million, £672 million and £661 million in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively. In the first two years, this is an increase of £14 million and £27 million respectively over the figures announced at the time of the last Budget. I also expect the private finance initiative to make an increasing contribution in the schools sector. I shall shortly announce further details of the allocations of grant to voluntary aided schools, and annual capital guidelines to local education authorities. The Funding Agency for Schools will in due course announce the allocations to grant maintained schools.

GM Schools

More than 1,000 schools are now grant-maintained. The Government's expenditure plans provide for further expansion. The GM sector's rate of growth will continue to be determined by parents' decisions in ballots at individual schools; the Government will ensure that every school which becomes grant-maintained receives the necessary funding.

The great bulk of recurrent funding for GM schools is found within the totals for local authority expenditure. Central Government's recurrent expenditure on GM schools is planned to be £83 million in 1995–96. This will be increased in 1996–97 and 1997–98 in line with the increase in GM schooi numbers.

Further Education

The Government continue to give a high priority to further education, as the key to enhancing the competitiveness and prospects for growth of the economy. Our plans will deliver the national targets for education and training, taking the United Kingdom to the top of the international league for participation in education and training among 16-19 year olds. We have been encouraged by the success of the new FE sector in increasing its student numbers, and intend to extend its period of growth: with continued efficiency gains from colleges, that will continue up to and including 1997–98.

The total grant for the Further Education Funding Council is planned at £3,029 million, £3,133 million and £3,128 million in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively.

The contribution towards capital expenditure within those totals is planned to be some £480 million over the next three years. In addition to maintaining planned funding levels, we are introducing new flexibility in capital and recurrent funding so as to enable colleges to make the most effective use of their resources, and to borrow against the security of Exchequer-funded as well as other assets. This should promote effective estate management and encourage the use of private sector finance, so making possible a significant acceleration in colleges' capital programmes.

The Chancellor of the Exchequer's statement of 14 September 1994 set out the Government's approach to public sector pay in the year now beginning. I shall set as a condition of my grant to the FEFC that it requires institutions in the further education sector to take account of the principles set out in the Chancellor's statement. Any failure by institutions to observe these principles may be expected to have an adverse effect on the level of grant made available to the Council in 1996–97. I shall also withhold £50 million of grant against certification by institutions in the sector that they are continuing to make flexible contracts with lecturers.

Vocational Qualifications

High quality vocational qualifications are central to our future economic development. We introduced general national vocational qualifications to meet the needs of hundreds of thousands of young people who seek a first class alternative to academic examinations or work focused national vocational qualifications. GNVQs are a great success. We must now consolidate early progress and ensure that concerns about retaining standards are addressed. We therefore plan to allocate £23 million to this area over the next three years. These additional resources will be used to ensure that all GNVQs meet the same high standards as we continue to expect of traditional academic qualifications, and to develop the part I GNVQ, a new vocational qualification of high quality designed for 14-16 year olds of all abilities, which we shall be piloting in schools from 1995.

Higher Education

Student Numbers

The forecast number of students in higher education has been revised to take account of final enrolment figures for 1993–94. The plans also allow for additional EC students arising from the enlargement of the EC with effect from 1 January 1995. The net effect of these changes is that planned total student numbers are reduced by 2,000 and 7,000 in 1995–96 and 1996–97 compared with the figures underlying last year's Budget; numbers in 1995–96 will still be 2 per cent. higher than in the previous year. Within the planned totals, it should be possible for universities and colleges to expand further the number of part-time students and to keep the participation rate for young people at over 30 per cent. through to 1997–98.

The Teacher Training Agency will be responsible for initial teacher training courses from the academic year 1995–96 onwards. I have asked the Higher Education Funding Council and the TTA to work together to continue to control the number of students in higher education over the next three years.

Tuition Fees

The maximum tuition fees reimbursed through mandatory awards in 1995–96 will be the same as for 1994–95:

Classroom-based courses	750
Laboratory and workshop-based courses	1,600
Clinical elements of medical, dental and veterinary courses	2,800

Grant to the funding Council and the Teacher Training Agency

The total grant for the HEFCE for recurrent and capital expenditure is planned at £3,613 million, £3,596 million and £3,561 million in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively. The total grant for the TTA for recurrent and capital expenditure is planned at £126 million, £174 million and £170 million in these three years; this includes funding for all the functions of the Agency, including the promotion of teaching as a career, as well as grant support for courses of initial teacher training.

The HEFCE and TTA will now have more flexibility in their planned total grant to manage their recurrent and capital allocations. As with the parallel change for the FEFC, this is intended to promote effective estate management by universities and colleges and to promote increased opportunities to borrow from the private sector to fund capital projects, in line with the Government's private finance initiative. The allowance for capital expenditure within the HEFCE grant is £350 million in 1995–96, £393 million in 1996–97 and £388 million in 1997–98. When taken together with the increased flexibility, this should enable higher education institutions to increase their capital investment as compared with previous plans. The TTA grant includes provision for estates formula and equipment funding related to the provision of courses of initial teacher training. All higher education institutions are eligible to apply to the HEFCE for capital funds for major projects.

I have set as a condition of my grant to the HEFCE and TTA that they require institutions in the higher education sector to take account of the principles set out in the Chancellor's statement on public sector pay of 14 September 1994. Any failure by institutions to observe these principles may be expected to have an adverse effect on the level of grant made available in 1996–97.

Student support

The plans allow for the level of student support through the main rates for grants and loans to be increased over the next three years in line with inflation. In 1995–96, loan and grant together will increase by 2.5 per cent. in line with the forecast change in the retail price index, exclusive of mortgage interest payments. Planned expenditure in the financial year 1995–96 is £644 million on loans and £1,102 million on maintenance grants. Access funds are being increased to some £28 million a year.

The main allowances, including dependants' allowances, will also be increased by 2.5 per cent. in 1995–96. However, I have decided to phase out the means-tested allowance payable as part of the maintenance grant to students over 26 who had previously been in employment. I have also decided to introduce a new rate of loan. This will apply to students who are studying in London and living away from the parental home but who could conveniently live with their parents while studying. There are already special arrangements for grant for such students.

The Government decided last year to accelerate the shift from grant to loan so that by 1996–97 the main rates of grant and loan will be broadly equal. The new plans provide for the main grant rate to be reduced by about 8 per cent. in 1995–96 with a corresponding increase in the loan rates. The parental contribution scales under the awards regulations will be adjusted so that, for parents who residual income has risen at the same rate or slower than the rise in national average earnings, the assessed contribution will continue to fall in real terms.

Ofsted

Expenditure provision for the Office for Standards in Education is planned at £98 million, £116 million and £121 million in 1995–96, 1996–97 and 1997–98 respectively. This will enable Ofsted, the non-ministerial Government Department which monitors standards in schools in England, to complete the implementation of the new school inspection arrangements, which started in September 1993 for secondary schools and in September 1994 for primary and special schools.

Truancy

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what is the total cost of the grants from her Department to install electronic equipment in schools to combat truancy;

(2) if she will name the schools and/or local education authorities which have benefited from grants from her Department to install electronic equipment to combat truancy.

Mr. Forth: The truancy and disaffected pupils programme of the grants for education support and training—GEST—scheme includes experimentation with different methods of registration, including the appropriate use of information technology, as one of a number of activities which may be funded through grant. In the 1994–95 programme, 35 local education authorities included an IT element in their approved GEST proposals. It is not possible to identify the cost of this element separately. The 35 LEAS were:

Barking and Dagenham
Barnsley
Birmingham
Bradford
Buckinghamshire
Camden
Cheshire
Coventry
Croydon
Derbyshire
East Sussex
Hammersmith and Fulham
Hampshire
Haringey
Hounslow
Islington
Kensington and Chelsea
Knowsley
Leeds
Lincolnshire
Liverpool
Newham
Salford
Sandwell
Sheffield
Solihull
Staffordshire
Stockport
Tameside
Wakefield
Wandsworth
Westminster
West Sussex
Wigan
Wolverhampton

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will name the schools which are fully operating the electronic equipment in schools to combat truancy.

Mr. Forth: It is for individual schools and governing bodies to determine whether or not to install electronic equipment to combat truancy. Details of those which have done so are not collected centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools Foundation

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what are the annual running costs of the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation offices in London, Bolton, Kirklees and Willenhall;

(2) how much rent per annum the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation pays for its head office and its regional offices in Bolton, Kirklees and Willenhall;

(3) how many staff are employed by the Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation in its offices in London, Bolton, Kirklees and Willenhall.

Mr. Robin Squire: The Grant-Maintained Schools Foundation's budget estimates for 1994–95 included £56,000 for rent and £401,000 for other running costs, including staffing, for its London office; and £8,000 for rent and £148,000 for other running costs, including staffing, for its local offices in Bolton, Kirklees and Walsall.

There are currently 7.7 full-time equivalent staff employed at the London office and four full-time staff at the three local offices.

Case Study Booklets

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many voluntary schools have ordered copies of the case study booklet on former voluntary schools; and how much her Department spent on the production of the booklet;

(2) how many (a) primary and (b) secondary schools have ordered copies of the case study booklet on the experiences of grant-maintained primary schools; and how much her Department spent on the production of the booklet.

Mr. Robin Squire: The three "Experiences" booklets about primary, secondary and former voluntary grant-maintained schools each provide factual information on grant-maintained status through case studies of seven schools. It is not possible to disaggregate the production costs of these booklets: the combined total cost of all three booklets was £112,500. To the end of October, some 11,100 copies of the primary booklet, 11,700 copies of the secondary booklet and 10,200 copies of the former voluntary booklet had been distributed. The Department does not keep records of the number of schools ordering these booklets.

GM Conferences

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many "Going GM" conferences her Department has organised in each year since 1989–90; at what cost; and how many schools attended each conference.

Mr. Robin Squire: The numbers of "Going GM" conferences organised by the Department are as follows:

1989–90 Nil
1990–91 Nil
1991–92 Nil
1992–93 11
1993–94 18
1994–95 8 (to date).

The total cost of these 37 conferences is estimated to be £583,000. The number of schools represented at each conference has varied from 22 to 139, with an average of 78. Most schools send more than one delegate to these conferences.

Doncaster College for the Deaf

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement in respect of the Further Education Funding Council's decision not to accept Doncaster college for the deaf as a recognised college of further education for the deaf.

Mr. Boswell: The Further Education Funding Council has confirmed that it will continue to fund places for students with learning difficulties and disabilities at Doncaster college for the deaf in cases which meet the council's published criteria for such placements.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what plans she has to provide information via Internet; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Forth: The Department is enthusiastic about the potential for using the Internet to facilitate the exchange of information. There are many opportunities and challenges arising from the new communications technology that need to be addressed in all areas of education.

The Department is undertaking pilot projects on the type of material best suited to this style of display. Press notices, including those containing statistical tables, could be made available electronically in this way. Electronic versions of departmental circulars and administrative memoranda might also provide a helpful reference service for educational bodies, as would current awareness lists of publications available from my Department and related bodies. The dissemination of information could be speeded up by providing electronic order forms.

In due course, advantage will be taken of the information pages of the Internet to hold reference material and departmental advice on a range of topics.

The Department will be participating in the follow up to the consultative meeting on information superhighways organised by the Government centre for information systems on 21 November, which has led to the formation of a number of collaborative open groups to look into various aspects of future superhighway development.

Further Education Colleges

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the application of the Trustee Investments Act 1961 to colleges of further education.

Mr. Boswell: An authoritative legal interpretation is a matter for the courts. My right hon. Friend is aware of differing external advice on the application of the Act to further education corporations. In the absence of an authoritative interpretation of the Act, it would be prudent for further education corporations to act on the basis that the Act applies to them. The Further Education Funding Council for England has issued guidance on the Act in its publication "Guide for College Governors" and in its circular 93/13.

Mr. Bryan Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will make a statement on the application of the Trustee Act 1925 to the governors of further education colleges; and what external advice she has received on the question.

Mr. Boswell: An authoritative legal interpretation is a matter for the courts. My right hon. Friend is aware of differing external advice on the application of the Act to further education corporations. In the absence of an authoritative interpretation of the Act, it would be prudent for further education corporations to act on the basis that the Act applies to them. For the purpose of whether members of corporations may receive any remuneration for their services as a member, my right hon. Friend considers that the lawfulness of any such payment will also depend on whether she has approved the payment in writing.

SCOTLAND

Bovine Spongiform Encephalopathy

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what evidence he has to suggest that BSE is either horizontally or maternally transmitted; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: There is no unequivocal evidence from field or experimental studies that the disease can be passed from cow to cow—horizontal transmission—or from a cow to its calf—vertical or maternal transmission.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. Lang: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available. As regards amounts spent on official hospitality, I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave on 25 October, Official Report, column 594 to the question by the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor).

Students (Exam Results)

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many students in each of the last three years in Scotland were dissatisfied with the higher grades allocated to them and asked for for their papers to be remarked; and in how many cases original marks were (a) upgraded, (b) downgraded and (c) unchanged.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The conditions for the award of the Scottish certificate of education do not include specific provisions for the remarking of candidates' scripts after the issue of results. Presenting centres are however able to appeal on behalf of candidates for reconsideration of an award at higher grade at band "C" or above on the basis of attainment other than that produced in the Scottish Examination Board's set examination. The table sets out information in relation to higher grade appeals submitted in each of the last three years.

No. of appeals submitted	16,488	16,731	18,761
No. of successful appeals	6,902	7,467	7,764
No. of unsuccessful appeals	9,586	9,264	10,997

Teachers

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the level of expenditure incurred in training (a) a teacher with a postgraduate certificate and (b) a teacher with a bachelor of education in Scotland for the years 1990–91 to 1993–94 inclusive; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Comprehensive information for the years 1990–91 to 1993–94 is not available. The information set out in the table is based upon returns from teacher education institutions detailing course costs for the years 1990–91 and 1991–92 and funding allocated to institutions by the Scottish Higher Education Funding Council for teacher education in 1993–94. The figures include also an estimate of student support costs, assuming entitlement to full maintenance grant and loan at the "home" rates.

Estimated annual cost per student

Education (Complaints)

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what steps he has taken to improve the complaints procedures for parents in Scotland this year; and in which education authorities.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It is important that education authorities have good complaints procedures so that parents can secure proper redress if things go wrong in schools. While such complaints procedures are primarily a matter for education authorities, the Scottish Office Education Department recently provided funding of £6,000 to the Scottish Consumer Council toward research in this field. The results of the research are contained in a report by the council on complaints and redress in Scottish schools, published in August 1994, entitled "Could Do Better". I welcome the report as a valuable contribution to the improvement of complaints procedures.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mrs. Ray Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what grants will be available from the local authorities to support the work of educational, social and cultural organisations after the present regional councils cease to exist.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: It will be for the new councils to determine the nature and level of support to educational, social and cultural organisations in the light of their statutory and other responsibilities. They will do so by taking into account both the information provided by their predecessors on funding of voluntary organisations and expenditure priorities for the resources available to them.

Dounreay

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what recent reports his Department has received from the United Kingdom Atomic Energy Authority on radiological safety and contamination at the Dounreay nuclear facility.

Sir Hector Monro: My Department receives regular reports from Dounreay, the most recent was an interim report on radioactive metallic particle finds on the Dounreay foreshore and was received by HM industrial pollution inspectorate on 27 October.

Loganair

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if his Department has as yet imposed financial penalties on Loganair in respect of the number of cancelled passenger flights between Glasgow and Barra; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The level of financial support paid to Loganair for the operation of the Glasgow-Tiree-Barra air service in the current financial year has been abated to take account of the number of cancellations on the route.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what feasibility studies he carried out on the passenger air link service between Glasgow and Barra before awarding it to Loganair.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The award of the contract to Loganair was made on the basis of a full evaluation of the bids received.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the terms and conditions arranged between his Department and Loganair for supplying a passenger air service between Glasgow and Barra.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The terms and conditions of contract between Loganair and the Scottish Office require the operator to provide a specified service between Glasgow and Tiree and Barra in return for the provision of financial support, up to a specified limit, based on the deficit incurred in operating the service. In general terms the operator is required to operate in accordance with the CAA regulatory regime, to advise the Scottish Office of any failure to operate the specified service, and to provide detailed financial information on the performance of the service. The contract can be terminated by either party with six months' notice and the consent of the Secretary of State is required for every change in the capacity, frequency, nature or any other attribute of the service.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the current cost of the public subsidy paid to Loganair for operating a passenger air service between Glasgow and Barra.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The financial support provided by the Scottish Office is for the operation of the air service between Glasgow and Tiree and Barra. The service operates as a combined service for part of the year and the Glasgow to Barra route is not identified separately. Financial support of up to £115,000 is payable for the operation of the service for each year of the contract between Loganair and the Scottish Office.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many complaints to date his Department had received in respect of the Loganair-Shorts 360 passenger air link service between Glasgow and Barra; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The Scottish Office has received 15 letters about the reliability of the air service between Glasgow and Tiree and Barra since the introduction of the Shorts 360 aircraft in March 1994. In addition, a petition containing 147 names was received requesting the replacement of the Shorts 360 aircraft on the Barra leg of the air service. In responding to the correspondence it was emphasised that the operation of the service was being monitored closely and that discussions were underway with the operator on ways in which improvements in reliability could be achieved quickly.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what reason Loganair gave his Department for suspending the De Haviland Twin Otter air link between Glasgow and Barra and replacing it with the Short 360; and what negotiations it had with his Department before implementing the change.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: Loganair's decision to dispose of its Twin Otter on the Glasgow-Tiree-Barra air service was made on the ground of the aircraft's age. The Shorts 360 aircraft was introduced with the intention of upgrading the service to improve passenger comfort, and increasing passenger and freight capacity. The Scottish Office, as the contractor, was consulted about the proposed change.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many times the Loganair-Shorts 360 aircraft passenger service between (a) Glasgow and Barra and (b) Barra and Glasgow has been cancelled since the service first became operational; and what percentage of total services this represents.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: In the period 28 March 1994 to 24 November 1994 inclusive, there were 210 scheduled rotations by the Shorts 360 on the Glasgow-Barra-Glasgow element of the Glasgow-Tiree-Barra air service. During this period 42 rotations, or 20 per cent. of the total, were cancelled. It is estimated that 22 rotational cancellations were linked to the operational limitations of the Shorts 360 aircraft.

Business Rates

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on business rates for 1995–96.

Mr. Lang: The estimated outcome of the 1995 revaluation will allow the average non-domestic rate poundage in Scotland to be reduced from its present level. I therefore propose to prescribe for 1995–96 a single rate poundage applying throughout the country of 43.2p and, at the same time, to abolish industrial derating entirely.

The introduction of a unified business rate poundage of 43.2p for Scotland, at the same level as in England, represents the successful culmination of the progress that has been made in recent years towards harmonising poundages. In the years after 1995–96 we will maintain a unified business rate in Scotland and it will continue to be pegged at the same level as in England to ensure a level playing field for Scottish business. This harmonisation will continue through future revaluations, and maintaining it will not be a burden on the Scottish Office expenditure programmes.

Taking together the effects of the forthcoming revaluation with this decision on the level of the rate poundage, I estimate that there will be significant local and sectoral shifts in rate burdens. My Department's consultation paper, published last month, outlined proposals for transitional arrangements to phase in the effect of these shifts on rate bills. In the light of responses to that paper, and the package of support announced by the Chancellor of the Exchequer today, I now propose that no business will face year-on-year increases of more than 10 per cent., after allowing for inflation. For property with a new rateable value of less than £10,000, the maximum real increase will be 7.5 per cent., while for part-residential subjects with a rateable value of less than £10,000 the corresponding limit will be 5 per cent.

The Exchequer contribution, amounting to £72 million in 1995–96, will cover part of the cost of the scheme. The remaining element will be met by limiting real reductions in rates bills, in line with one of the options presented in the consultation paper. For 1995–96, the limits will be 10 per cent. for properties with a new rateable value below £10,000 and 5 per cent. for larger ones.

Other details of the transitional arrangements will be based on the proposals in the consultation paper. My officials intend to hold further detailed discussions with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities and the Scottish Assessors' Association in the light of responses to the paper. Once these consultative discussions are concluded, regulations giving effect to these proposals will be laid before Parliament.

Common Services Agency

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what progress has been made in the sale of the building division of the Common Services Agency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: Following an invitation to tender, 41 companies including a joint in-house management team and company expressed interest. This resulted in seven bids and following further clarification of these and negotiations with the parties I am pleased to announce that the Common Services Agency has with my consent accepted the offer from W.S. Atkins. The result is a receipt of £250,000 plus VAT to be re-invested in health care in Scotland and the continuity of employment for around 100 staff who will transfer with their existing workload to their new employers on 1 December 1994. The transfer is subject to the Transfer of Undertakings (Protection of Employment) Regulations 1981 and will be a clean break for the agency with no continuing liabilities and warranties to be underwritten by it.

I regard the outcome as in the best interests of the taxpayer, of the staff and for the NHS in Scotland.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Kynoch: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will announce details of the 1995–96 Scottish local government finance settlement.

Mr. Lang:

Government Support Expenditure

I propose that Government supported expenditure—GSE—for 1995–96 should be set at £6,116.9 million. Inclusive of additional provision for care in the community, this is an increase of 1.72 per cent. on the current year's figure.

Grant Aided Expenditure

I estimate that local authorities will incur £798.7 million on loan and leasing charges in 1995–96. This amount is top-sliced from GSE, leaving a residual amount for grant aided expenditure—GAE—of £5,318.2 million. This figure is 1.11 per cent. higher than that for the current year. I shall announce GAE figures for individual local authorities as soon as possible.

Aggregate External Finance

I further propose that Government-determined support for local authority current expenditure—that is, aggregate external finance (AEF)—for 1995–96 should be set at £5,306 million. This is an increase of 0.64 per cent. on the current year's figure. Proposals for the distribution of AEF to individual local authorities are again likely to be issued before Christmas.

Provisional Capping Principles

To assist local authorities in their budgeting process, I have again decided to announce provisional capping principles for the year ahead. I have the power to cap a Scottish local authority either where I consider that its planned expenditure is excessive or where there is an excessive increase in its planned expenditure as compared with the previous year. My provisional capping principles for 1995–96 are:

(a) for regional and islands councils

any increase in budget between 1994–95 and 1995–96 of more than 0.7 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the local authority's grant aided expenditure (GAE) assessment for 1995–96;

(b) for district councils

any increase in budget between 1994–95 and 1995–96 of more than 0.5 per cent. will be an excessive increase if the resulting budget is above the local authority's GAE assessment for 1995–96; and

(c) for all local authorities

any budget for 1995–96 more than 12.5 per cent. above the local authority's GAE assessment will be excessive save that:

(a) if that budget is 30 per cent. or less above the authority's GAE assessment for 1995-96 and that budget is no greater than the budget set by that authority for 1994–95, the authority will not be capped;

(b) if that budget is 60 per cent. or less above the authority's GAE assessment for 1995–96 and that budget is at least 5 per cent. below the budget set by that authority for 1994–95, the authority will not be capped;

(c) if that budget is at least 10 per cent. below the budget set by the authority for 1994–95, the authority will not be capped.

Council Tax Transitional Relief Scheme

As we are now approaching the third year of the council tax and tax payers have had an opportunity to adjust to the new system, I have decided not to continue in 1995–96 the transitional relief scheme which has operated for the past two years.

In determining the level of this settlement, I have assumed—in line with the Government's general approach to public sector pay—that any pay increases for Scottish local authority employees will be fully funded by efficiency savings. The settlement includes provision for a number of additional burdens being placed on local authorities next year including improvements to school and social work transport, the continued introduction of devolved school management, child care developments and the costs of the elections of the shadow councils.

This is a tight settlement but, having regard to the low level of inflation and the Government's approach to public sector pay, a realistic one. The onus is now on local authorities to act sensibly in setting their budgets and council tax levels for next year. I shall not hesitate to use my capping powers to prevent excessive expenditure.

Nurses

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the number of qualified nursing staff by specialty for each region in each of the last five years.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton: As information requested is rather lengthy I am arranging for a copy of the reply to be sent to the hon. Member and will place a copy in the Library of the House.

Ministerial Travel

Mrs. Roche: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many overseas visits he and each of his Ministers made between 1 January and 30 June; during how many he or each of his Ministers participated in fund-raising activities for the Conservative party; and if he will list the Ministers and the countries in which these activities took place.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 21 November 1994]: Between 1 January and 30 June 1994, Ministers in my Department made 11 overseas visits in their official capacity. Fund-raising activities for the Conservative party are not part of our official duties.

Exports

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was Scotland's share of United Kingdom exports in each year since 1974; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 November 1994]: As shown in the table, Scottish exports continue to rise. The Scottish Council Development and Industry's survey of Scottish manufactured exports revealed that, in 1993, exports reached a new high of almost £11.5 billion. The growth rate of 19.2 per cent. from the previous year indicates that the opportunities presented by a competitive currency and lower interest rates over the past two years have been grasped by Scottish industry.

Scottish manufactured exports have grown faster in the last two years than in the previous six

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the value of Scottish exports to the Scottish economy in (a) absolute terms and (b) as a percentage of gross domestic product in each year since 1979.

Mr Lang [holding answer 24 November 1994]: As Scottish gross domestic product is not calculated on an expenditure measure, it is not possible to make direct comparisons with this data.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the value to Scotland's economy of exports from the (a) food and drink, (b) chemicals, (c) oil and gas, (d) engineering, (e) electronics, (f) financial services and (g) tourism sectors; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 24 November 1994]: Strong growth recorded in all Scotland's major exporting industries over the period.

Sectoral performances in 1993 reveal food and drink exports were worth some £2.5 billion, of which £2.1 billion is whisky; chemicals worth £1.3 billion; engineering, including mechanical, transport equipment and motor vehicle parts £1.4 billion; electronics, including computers, £4.9 billion; tourism £670 million provisional figure—financial services worth £285 million, rising to around £393.7 million if legal and accountancy figures are included.

Oil and gas sector exports in the period were estimated to be worth some £850 million. This figure relates to exports generated by service sector and supply companies in the world marketplace. Such Scottish companies export around 20 per cent. of their annual turnover.

North Lanarkshire Council

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what estimate he makes of the cost to his Department of setting up the new North Lanarkshire council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The cost to my Department of setting up the new Lanarkshire council has not been quantified but is likely to be minimal.

Road Safety

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to regional and islands councils on the gritting of roads leading to schools which are not designated bus routes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: No specific advice has been given to regional and islands councils on the gritting of roads leading to schools which are not designated bus routes. Regional and islands councils determine their own priorities for gritting roads for which they are responsible.

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what advice he has given to education authorities on school bussing in adverse weather conditions and where access to a school requires school buses to travel on roads other than designated bus routes; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: None. Under sections 50 and 51 of the Education (Scotland) Act 1980, responsibilities for the provision of school transport are placed on individual education authorities.

M80 Motorway

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects construction to commence on the proposed M80 motorway between Stepps and Haggs; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: After widespread consultation, a decision will be taken shortly on the proposed route for the M80, followed in due course by initiation of the appropriate statutory procedures. The construction timetable will be dependent on completion of the statutory procedures and the availability of finance.

National Vocational Qualifications

Mr. Norman Hogg: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many full national vocational qualifications have been awarded in the current year and in each year since 1992; at which levels these awards were made; and how many, at each level, were awarded in construction, engineering, manufacturing, health and social care, business administration, accounting and financial services and management, respectively.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The available information on Scottish vocational qualifications is set out in the table.

Refugees (College Fees)

Mr. Dunnachie: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to review the current practice whereby colleges charge asylum seekers and political refugees the home student rates of fees for part-time study; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Scottish Office Education Department is currently consulting further higher education institutions about the possibility of allowing them to charge part-time students from overseas a different rate of fees from home students. It is not our intention to change how individuals granted refugee status are treated. Institutions have specifically been asked as part of the consultation if they are likely to offer concessions to students who have applied for refugee status. Their responses will be taken into account in taking any proposals forward.

Community Care

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what considerations led him to favour the private sector for the development of a mixed economy of community care; what consideration he gave to the use of the voluntary sector or direct local provision; and if he will make a statement.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Prior to 1 April 1993 local authorities purchased no community care services from the private sector. Since then the Government have transferred considerable resources to local authorities which under previous arrangements would have been used to purchase residential and nursing homes care from the private and voluntary sectors. The new arrangements are based on local authorities undertaking an enabling role. They should commission services offering quality and value for money. That involves not only arranging care in their own provider units but purchasing care from providers in the private and voluntary sectors.

While many authorities have taken on this role on an even-handed, basis some appear to wish to use the additional resources to favour their own provider units even when these do not offer best value for money. The Secretary of State has encouraged authorities to make best use of the resources available to meet the care needs of the people in their areas.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what priority he gives to (a) quality and standards, (b) accessibility and affordability for all and (c) cost-efficiency in the development of a mixed economy of community care.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Government, in their guidance to local statutory and independent sector agencies, have pointed to the importance of all these factors. Local authorities are responsible for evaluating the relative importance of each of these factors as they relate to individuals' needs. In doing so they must also take full account of individuals' choice.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will introduce an inspection and registration procedure for domiciliary care in the community.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: My right hon. Friend has no such plans at present.

Ms Rachel Squire: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the evidence he has that the development of the mixed economy of community care has been unsatisfactory.

Lord James Douglas Hamilton [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Scottish Office publishes a range of annual indicators on community care, including the development of the mixed economy.

Forests

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland on what date Her Majesty's Treasury was invited to comment on the Forest Enterprise framework document.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 November 1994]: HM Treasury is assisting with the preparation of the framework document and a draft was discussed with it on 21 October.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to present the Forest Enterprise framework document to Parliament and to publish it for public consultation.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The finalised framework document will be published and a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the areas of land identified by the Forestry Commission or Forest Enterprise for sale since 1981 but which have not been sold, with the size of those areas, the county or, if in Scotland, region in which they are situated and the year in which they were identified for sale.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Forestry Commission keeps records of all the land it has sold and of land it currently has on the market. It does not, however, retain records on cases where land was put on the market and then later withdrawn, for whatever reason. The information requested is therefore not available.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Alternative Dispute Resolution

Dr. Lynne Jones: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department what measures he has taken to support alternative dispute resolution.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The Lord Chancellor has welcomed the growth of private alternative dispute resolution services where the parties do not need the compulsion, finality and certainty that only the courts can provide. My officials have carefully studied reports of ADR experience in this country and abroad. However, before committing public money to ADR the Lord Chancellor is concerned to have much greater certainty that such methods would produce the benefits to the Department which its supporters claim.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. John M. Taylor: There are three top secret and 124 secret files out of a total of 105,535 files in the Lord Chancellor's Department. These figures refer to individual file parts. The proportion of top secret and secret files is 0.002 per cent. and 0.117 per cent respectively.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices, his official residence in London and official residences.

Mr. Howard: Disaggregated information of this nature is not available, but no public expenditure is envisaged in relation to Christmas festivities.

Crime Statistics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to ensure that all chief constables define crimes accurately when compiling statistics.

Mr. Maclean: When recording offences police consult Home Office rules for classification and counting of crimes which are standard for all the police forces in England and Wales. The classification of crimes is determined by precise statutory definitions. A comprehensive set of counting rules is used by police forces in order to maintain the consistency of recording multiple, continuous and repeated offences. Whilst these detailed rules are issued centrally, many decisions still have to be taken locally about the recording and counting of criminal incidents. When carrying out force inspections, Her Majesty's inspectorate of constabulary looks carefully at how forces record crime. If it seems that crimes are being wrongly recorded, HMIC will advise forces to adjust their practice.

Criminal Justice Act

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received on the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994 and on the Bill which led to it.

Mr. Maclean: About 2,000 letters have been received from members of Parliament, most of them covering representations from constituents about the Criminal Justice and Public Order Bill or Act or aspects of them. In addition, around 2,500 letters have been received direct from members of the public, together with representations from groups with a particular interest in the criminal justice system.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people have been charged under the Criminal Justice and Public Order Act 1994.

Mr. Maclean: Information on numbers of people charged is not collected centrally. Information on the number of people cautioned and the number of court proceedings for offences committed under the Criminal Justice Act 1994 will become available from the autumn of 1995.

Police (Disciplinary Code)

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has received from the Police Federation about police officers incurring debt due to the Child Support Act and their disciplinary code; what response he has given to the suggestion to change the disciplinary code; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: None. On 28 June, the president of ACPO wrote to chief constables expressing confidence that the service would be compassionate to officers who experienced financial difficulties as a result of Child Support Agency commitments.

The Government have already announced that new police disciplinary procedures will be implemented under the Police and Magistrates' Courts Act 1994. These will give police managers greater discretion when dealing with officers in debt, however the debt was incurred.

Fire Services

Mr. Chidgey : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what percentage of fire appliances arrived at emergencies in the London area within (a) three minutes, (b) four minutes, (c) five minutes, (d) six minutes, (e) seven minutes, (f) eight minutes, (g) nine minutes, (h) 10 minutes, (i) 11 minutes and, (j) 12 minutes, in 1992, 1993 and in the current year to date.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The data requested are shown in the table; 1993 is the latest year for which data are available.

Response times[1] to fires in London, 1992 and 1993

Response times (minutes)	1992 Number of fires	1992 Cumulative percentage	1993 Number of fires	1993 Cumulative percentage

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish the data he has for the response times for fire appliances in Hampshire in 1992 and 1993.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The data requested are shown in the table:

Response times to fires in Hampshire, 1992 and 1993

Response time	1992 Number of fires	1992 Cumulative Percentage	1993 Number of fires	1993 Cumulative Percentage

Omasese Lumumba

Mr. Cohen : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now place in the Library the internal prison report into the death of Mr. Omasese Lumumba; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 30 November 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the death of Mr. Omasese Lumumba.

Subject to considerations of security and to the Coroner's consent, before an inquest, the Prison Service is generally prepared to disclose copies of documents provided to the Coroner to anyone who is a "properly interested person"under the Coroner's rules.

Reports of follow-up internal investigations, including statements taken by the investigating governor, are not disclosed as the Prison Service needs to be able to conduct its own review of the case in confidence.

A similar policy applies to the deaths of persons in the custody of the Prison Service detained under the Immigration Act.

Asylum Seekers

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the current average wait for asylum applications; and how many applicants have waited for (a) six months, (b) one year, (c) two years and (d) over two years.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The estimated average length of time between the receipt of an asylum application and the decision, for cases decided in the period 1 August 1994 to 31 October 1994, on applications received since the introduction of the Asylum and Immigration Appeals Act 1993 on 26 July 1993 was 6.8 months.

In the period 1 August 1994 to 31 October 1994, there were 6,105 decisions made on applications for asylum. Of these, 1,600 took under six months to decide; 1,525 took between six months and a year; 1,385 took between one and two years; and 1,595 took longer than two years for an initial decision on their application for asylum.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the length of time each detained asylum seeker has been held in custody; what review he undertook of their cases; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: On 18 November 1994, 654 people who had claimed asylum at some stage were detained under powers contained in the Immigration Act 1991. Of this total, 167 had been detained for less than 1 month; 125 between one and two months; 233 between two and six months; and 129 had been in detention for more than six months.

The initial decision to detain is reviewed within 24 hours by an immigration service inspector. Thereafter, all detention is reviewed locally at least every seven days.

After one month the case is reviewed at immigration service headquarters. These reviews continue monthly and at an increasingly senior level. In addition, I receive a monthly report on all cases where detention has been maintained for more than 12 months.

Private Security Services

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the provisions of training and health and safety practices for people working in the private security service.

Mr. Maclean: The Government believe that training is essentially a matter for the private security industry and its customers. We welcome the industry's efforts to develop and raise standards in this area. The Health and Safety at Work Act 1974 applies to those employed by private security companies as it does to other employees in the workplace.

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to introduce regulations to ensure a minimum standard of conduct for private security operators; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: We have no plans to do so.

Commission for Racial Equality

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how much money has been spent on hospitality by the Commission for Racial Equality in each of the last five years; if he will indicate (a) the nature and cost and (b) the purpose of each event; how many (i) guests and (ii) commission personnel enjoyed the hospitality at each event; and if he will make a statement;

(2) under what authority the Commission for Racial Equality may extend hospitality in public houses to the staff of right hon. and hon. Members; what was the purpose of the reception for research assistants planned by the commission for Thursday 24 November in the Red Lion pub, Whitehall; why that reception was subsequently cancelled; if he will ensure that public funds are not used by the commission for such purposes in the future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I will write to the hon. Member and a copy of the letter will be placed in the Library.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to suspend all payments to the Commission for Racial Equality until such time as the House has the opportunity to consider proposed legislation for its abolition.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: No.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) what funds have been made available to the Commission for Racial Equality in each of the last five years for which figures are available; for what purpose those funds are intended; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will give a breakdown by (a) ethnic background and (b) salary of the numbers of people currently employed by the Commission for Racial Equality.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The information requested is detailed in the Commission for Racial Equality's annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Police Pay

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will ensure that police authorities fully compensate police officers for any losses incurred as a result of changes in pay day arrangements.

Mr. Maclean: It is for a police authority, within the terms of regulation 46 of the Police Regulations, to fix the pay day for members of the police force. I am confident that if a police authority decided to change existing arrangements it would manage the process so as to ensure that police officers were not disadvantaged.

Conservative Party Conference, Brighton

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will state (a) the number of payments made, (b) the total sum, (c) the highest individual award and (d) the average time taken to make the payment in respect of persons injured in the Brighton bombing at the Conservative party conference.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. member to the answer given to the hon. member for Cardiff, South and Penarth (Mr. Michael) on 19 October at column 246.

Bail Hostels

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the average cost per person per month for bail hostel accommodation.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: The total average cost per person per month for approved probation/bail hostel accommodation in 1993–94 was £1,451, reflecting occupancy in the system as a whole of only 68 per cent. With improved occupancy, the projected figure for 1994–95 is £1,232.

Greyhound Racing

Mr. McKelvey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to consult interested parties about the proposals to deregulate the controls on betting on greyhound racing.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: We have today issued a consultation document which gives details of the proposed changes to the law controlling betting on greyhound racing. These will give consumers a wider range of betting opportunities and remove the outdated restrictions governing betting on the sport. At the same time we shall ensure that sufficient safeguards are maintained to protect consumers.

One of the key benefits is the proposed introduction of a new system of inter-track tote betting. Customers will have the freedom to bet into large linked pools on races at other licensed tracks. There will be provision for local authorities to oversee the operation of inter-track betting.

The other deregulatory measures, such as removal of the requirement for an accountant to be present whenever totes are operated, represent sensible improvements in the current controls. Such changes will not, in the view of those representatives of local authorities previously consulted, interfere with the proper supervision of tote betting at greyhound tracks.

Subject to the outcome of the consultation process, we propose to bring forward these changes by means of a draft order under the Deregulation and Contracting Out

Act 1984. Copies of the consultation document have been placed in the Libraries.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Howard: As at 31 December 1993, the Home Office held 707 top secret and 86,049 secret files, representing 0.015 per cent. and 1.8 per cent. respectively of the approximate total—4.8 million—of the Department's files at that time.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Mining Licences

Mr. Hain: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what arrangements are being implemented for existing licenses mine owners to renew their licences; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: This is a matter for the Coal Authority. I am asking the Coal Authority to write to the hon. Member.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mrs. Anne Campbell : To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are his plans to increase the security of temporary on-site nuclear waste storage facilities at nuclear power stations.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The safety of storage facilities for radioactive waste on nuclear power station sites is a matter on which the operator must satisfy the regulatory authorities.

Post Office

Dr. Marek: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money has been raised by (a) capital receipts arising from the reductions in the numbers of Crown post offices in the last 15 years and (b) for savings in revenue expenditure consequent on the reductions.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The reduction in Crown post offices since April 1989, largely due to the conversion programme of Crown post offices to agency status, had by March 1994 yielded £5.0 million in capital receipts and £20.7 million in annually recurring revenue savings.

Chemical Weapons Convention

Mr. Gapes: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the progress towards the entry into force of the chemical weapons convention; and if it remains his policy that the United Kingdom should become an original signatory of the convention.

Mr. Heseltine: It remains the Government's policy to ratify the chemical weapons convention as soon as possible. The necessary implementing legislation will be introduced as soon as parliamentary time and other Government legislative priorities permit.

Life Assurance Companies

Mr. Denham: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what sanctions are available to his Department to bring against the directors of life assurance companies which have been found to be in serious breach of regulations governing the financial service industry.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Under the Insurance Companies Act 1982 the Secretary of State's powers are exercisable in relation to insurance companies rather than in relation to individual directors. However, under that Act the Secretary of State shall not authorise a company to carry on insurance business, and may withdraw an existing authorisation, if it appears to him that any director, controller, manager or main agent of the company is not a fit and proper person to hold the position held by him. The powers of intervention set out in sections 38 and 41 to 45 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 are also exercisable on these grounds.

Fraud Investigations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make it his policy that findings of DTI inspectors will continue to be made available to police investigating fraud.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: Yes. It is and will remain my Department's policy to do so in appropriate cases.

Waste Paper and Packaging

Mr. Gallie: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps are being taken to bring stability to the United Kingdom waste paper and packaging collection market; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Stability in the market cannot be guaranteed, since waste paper is an internationally traded commodity, and as such is subject to fluctuating demand and price. I believe, however, that two developments will help bring about greater stability than that experienced in recent months as a result of packaging waste management regulations in other countries.

The first is the adoption of the proposed EC Directive harmonising member states' regulations in this area, which the Government has supported. I am hopeful that such adoption will occur before the end of 1994. The second is the introduction of industry measures in response to our producer responsibility initiative for packaging. These should lead to co-ordinated recycling activity which is related to demand, and does not trigger the distorting effects of over-collection which have been apparent elsewhere.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Ian Taylor: No central record is kept by my Department of files marked "top secret" and "secret". Offices throughout the Department may possess in their registries any number of files bearing protective markings. The information requested is therefore not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Dounreay

Mrs. Fyfe: To ask the President of the Board of Trade on what grounds AEA technology jobs at Dounreay have been privatised.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's intention to privatise what is now AEA Technology was announced last February by my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy, 17 February 1994, Official Report, columns 922-24. The announcement outlined the criteria on which decisions on the form of privatisation will be taken. As announced in the Queen's Speech, a Bill to provide for privatisation will be introduced this Session.

Scottish Hallmarks

Dr. Godman: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what recent representations he has received concerning the continuity of the Scottish hallmark, the lion rampant and Edinburgh castle marks in relation to proposals emanating from the European Commission on hall-marking and assay offices; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I have received no specific representations concerning the Scottish marks. The Government are aware of the depth of feeling in the industry at large, in the assay offices, and amongst consumer organisations, that traditional marks, including town marks, should continue to be allowed under the terms of the proposed directive. The Government will continue to argue for their use.

Life assurance

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the implications for unit-linked life assurance policies of the High Court judgement in the case of Fuji v. Aetna

Mr. Jonathan Evans: In July this year the Vice Chancellor the right hon. Sir Donald Nicholls gave judgment in the Chancery Division of the High Court on a preliminary point arising in a dispute between a life insurance company and one of its policyholders—Fuji Finance Inc. v. Aetna Life Insurance Ltd. and Another. The Vice Chancellor decided that a particular contract which purported to be a contract of life insurance was not, as a matter of law, a contract of insurance at all. The feature of the contract which led to this conclusion was that there was no difference, once the contract had run for five years, between the amount payable on the death of the life assured at a given time and the amount that could be obtained by surrendering the policy at the same time.

An appeal has been launched against this judgment, and the outcome of that appeal may obviously affect the position. But on the basis of the judgment it appears possible that other linked policies which offer no greater return on death than on surrender may similarly not be regarded as contracts of insurance. However, the judgment did not express an opinion about policies which, during the majority of their term, carry on somewhat higher additional level of benefit on death, or include some other guarantee in relation to the benefits payable on death but not on surrender.

The Department of Trade and Industry does not monitor as a matter of course the terms of individual life insurance policies. However, prior to the Vice Chancellor's judgment, the level of additional benefit on death included in a linked policy was not considered by the Department to be critical in determining whether the policy was a contract of insurance. The Department would have taken into account other features of the contract; and it seems likely that, had the question been raised, policies of the kind described in the judgment would have been treated by the Department as life assurance policies. I understand that the Financial Services Act regulators and the Inland Revenue have taken a similar view: as, presumably, have life assurance companies and their policyholders. It is understandable, therefore, that the judgment has created some concern in the insurance industry, particularly as it is not yet clear how far it affects contracts that are similar to, but not on all fours with, the particular policy that was considered in this case.

Companies which have not already done so will wish to take advice upon the legal implications of this judgment for linked policies issued by them. It may however be helpful to them to explain the Government's attitude to certain statutory provisions which appear relevant.

Section 16 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982 prohibits insurance companies from carrying on activities other than in connection with or for the purposes of their insurance business; and the Act confers upon the DTI certain powers of intervention if there is a failure to comply with that section. The Department has taken the view that the judgment has created sufficient uncertainty about the status of contracts carrying no additional benefit on death that it would wish to know if companies propose to continue to issue any such policies. As regards other policies, the Department does not propose to take any action while the judgment is under appeal. However, when the outcome of the appeal is known, it will clearly need to review the position with a view to ensuring that the terms of the section are met for the future.

Companies will also need to bear in mind that their authorisation to carry on investment business under Section 22 of the Financial Services Act 1986 relates only to insurance business and other business that can be conducted in accordance with section 16 of the Insurance Companies Act 1982.

In considering whether to use its enforcement powers in relation to investment business carried on in contravention of section 3 of the FSA, one of the factors which the Securities and Investments Board will take into account, in relation to business carried on prior to the judgment, is that contracts of the kinds likely to be affected have been consistently treated as contracts of insurance. Investors considering whether to take action under section 5 of the FSA will also need to take account of the same factor.

My right hon. Friend the Financial Secretary to the Treasury is making a separate statement about the tax implications of the judgment.

Telecommunications Council

Mr. Clifton-Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the outcome of the Telecommunications Council on 17 November.

Mr. Ian Taylor: The Council adopted a resolution setting a date of 1 January 1998 for the liberalisation of the provision of telecommunications infrastructure, with a possibility of five years additional transition period for Portugal, Spain, Ireland and Greece and two years for Luxembourg. The United Kingdom, supported by five other countries, called upon the Commission to submit proposals for an earlier liberalisation of the use of alternative infrastructure for those services already liberalised at the Community level.

The Council also agreed a common position on a directive on standards for digital television. In addition, the Council agreed, in principle a common position on a decision on guidelines for the development for the integrated services digital networks as a trans-European network. The Council also reached agreement on all the outstanding issues on a decision on interchange of data between Administrations, except funding. The decision was referred back to the Committee of Permanent Representatives for further discussion of the budget. The text of a Council Resolution on access to the space segment and the reform of the international satellite organisations was agreed.

There was a short debate on the draft directives on mutual recognition of satellite and telecommunications licences. The Commission made presentations on the results of its consultations on the Green Paper on Mobile and Personal Communications and its communication on transport telematics. The Commission also stated that it expected to produce proposals on liberalisation of postal services during the first part of 1995.

No formal vote was taken at this Council.

Tile and Sanitary Ware Manufacturing

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what consultation he has had with the United Kingdom tile and sanitary ware manufacturers concerning the implications of granting aid to encourage inward investment; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 November 1994]: I have had no consultation with the United Kingdom tile and sanitary ware manufacturers with regard to the implications for granting aid to encourage inward investment. The United Kingdom industry is not consulted about individual applications for assistance. The likely impact on the United Kingdom industry of assistance towards investment projects is always assessed before decisions are made on whether or not grant should be offered.

Ms Walley: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assistance he has approved for inward investment in Turkish sanitary ware and ceramic tile manufacturing to Merseyside.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 November 1994]: I cannot comment on discussions between companies and the Department which are commercially confidential.

H. L. Foods Ltd.

Mr. David Porter: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much money H. L. Foods, through its cannery at Wisbech, has been paid from assisted area status funding to purchase equipment; how much of this was spent on purchasing equipment from Hobson plc's former cannery at Lowestoft; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 28 November 1994]: We do not disclose information on individual cases, which is given on a commercial in confidence basis.

Capcom Financial Services

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has made to appropriate authorities in the USA concerning the affairs of Capcom Financial Services of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 29 November 1994]: No representations have been made by me to the appropriate authority in USA concerning the affairs of CAPCOM Financial Services of London.

Mr. Madden: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he has received about Capcom Financial Services of London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans [holding answer 29 November 1994]: It is not the practice of the Department to comment on the affairs of individual companies.

Oil and Gas Exploration

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what environmental advice he received on blocks 106/24, 106/25 and 106/30A prior to offering them for tender.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Those environmental Departments and organisations who provided advice following consultation, both generally for the Round and in respect of blocks 106/24, 106/25 and 106/30a are indicated on the following list.

Countryside Commission[1]
Department of the Environment[1]
Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland[1]
Dyfed Wildlife Trust[1]
Friends of Cardigan Bay[2]
Friends of the Earth Cymru[1]
Greenpeace[1]
Joint Countryside Advisory Service[1]
Joint Nature Conservation Committee[2] who in turn consult—
English Nature
Countryside Council for Wales
Royal Society for the Protection of Birds
Scottish Natural Heritage
Sea Mammal Research Unit
North Wales Wildlife Trust[2]
The National Trust[1]
RSNC Wildlife Trusts Partnership[2]
Strangford Lough Management Committee[1]
Welsh Office[2]
The Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust[1]
Wildlife and Countryside Link[2]
World Wide Fund for Nature[2]

[1] Those who provided advice on the Round.
[2] Those who have specifically mentioned blocks 106/24, 106/25 and 106/30a in their advice.

Coal Industry

Mr. Byers: To ask the President of the Board of Trade who much the chairmen and members of the British Coal Authority are to be paid; and, for each member, what other publicly funded posts they hold.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Sir David White receives a salary of £18,000 a year as part-time Chairman of the Coal Authority. Mr Neville Washington, its full-time chief executive, receives a salary of £55,000 plus pension and a car allowance. He is also eligible for a non-pensionable performance bonus. The other part-time members receive a salary of £5,500 per annum.

The other paid public appointments held by the members of the Coal Authority are:

Sir David White: Chairman of the Nottingham health authority;

Mr. Roy Lynk: Industrial tribunal member in Nottingham; and

Mr. Leslie Rendell: the retiring director of planning and transport of Warwickshire county council.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Fire Certificate

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Chairman of the Accommodation and Works Committee what applications were made in the last year for the Houses of Parliament to receive a fire certificate; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ray Powell : No application has been made for a fire certificate in the last year. Home Office fire inspectors have recently surveyed the Palace of Westminster and are expected to be in a position to issue a fire certificate in 1995.

Access Passes

Mr. Madden: To ask the Chairman of the Administration Committee if he will list those organisations, excluding media organisations, whose employees have, to date, been issued by the House authorities with passes giving access to the House; what are the main criteria which are observed in determining eligibility for passes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael J. Martin [holding answer 29 November 1994]: As the number of organisations whose employees are issued with passes is very large, I will write to the hon. Member.

PRIME MINISTER

Welsh Development Agency

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what plans he has to order a public inquiry into illegal and improper activities by the Welsh Development Agency.

The Prime Minister: None. The mistakes of the past are being thoroughly investigated by the new management team. The chief executive of the agency is keeping the Chairman of the Public Accounts Committee fully informed.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has stated clearly that the highest standards should be observed in all the Welsh Development Agency's dealings.

Ministers' Cars

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Prime Minister what rules apply to the marque of official cars used by Ministers.

The Prime Minister: Cabinet Ministers are normally given the choice of a Rover Sterling, Rover 827Si or any other vehicle from the Rover 800 series.

Other Ministers are normally given the choice of a Rover 416, 2-litre Montego, 2-litre Vauxhall Cavalier, 2-litre Ford Mondeo or diesel equivalents.

Steroids

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Prime Minister (1) if he will set up a public inquiry into the use of steroids in hospitals;

(2) if he will make a statement on the use of steroids;

(3) what consideration he is giving, with the Secretary of State for Health, to measures to reassure the public regarding the use of steroids;

(4) if he will inquire into the case of Mrs. Niven of 11 Alvin close, Binley, Coventry.

The Prime Minister: Corticosteroids are long-established medicines which are important in the treatment of many serious illnesses, and their overall benefits to patients outweigh their side-effects. The Department of Health has fully investigated the effects of corticosteroids, given by mouth or injection, on the body's immune system. Advice about patients who are susceptible to chickenpox has been issued to all doctors.

A public inquiry is not appropriate. It is for doctors to decide the appropriate treatment for their patients with the benefit of advice from their professional bodies. The circumstances surrounding Mrs. Niven's death were fully investigated by the Coventry and Warwick hospital and the outcome discussed with her family.

The Department of Health has issued a press statement regarding the safety of corticosteroids, advising patients using these medicines who are concerned to see their doctor and not to stop their medication suddenly. As with all licensed medicines, my right hon. Friend, the Secretary of State for Health continues to monitor their safety.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Prime Minister how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

The Prime Minister: Approximately 1 to 2 per cent. of the files held in my office are top secret, approximately five per cent. are secret.

Citizens Charter (Mr. Purnell)

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Prime Minister what representations he has received from Mr. David Hernandez Purnell; and what was his response.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 November 1994]: I have received a number of representations. These relate to a specific matter which is the responsibility of the Highways Agency. The agency is giving active consideration to the case.

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Prime Minister if he will make a statement regarding the letter of 13 November to the Treasury Solicitor from a constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich, a copy of which was forwarded to him; and what assessment he has made of the conformity of Her Majesty's Government's action with the spirit of the citizens charter.

The Prime Minister [holding answer 28 November 1994]: I have nothing further to add to the reply that my hon. Friend, the Parliamentary Secretary, Office of Public Service and Science, gave to the hon. Member on 28 November, Official Report, columns 483-84.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

EU Committee of the Regions

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many meetings of the Committee of the Regions of the European Union have been held since it was established under the Maastricht treaty; what reports have been received from the Committee to date; what responses have been made to these reports; and what has been the cost of United Kingdom required representation to the Committee.

Mr. David Davis: There have been five plenary meetings of the EC's Committee of the Regions. The Council has so far received 20 opinions from the Committee. The Council makes no formal response to opinions, but takes them into account during the decision-making process. No attendance is required at Committee meetings. Members receive travel and subsistence allowances for meetings which they do attend. We do not hold information on expenses paid to individual Committee members.

Short Stay Visas

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many short stay visas were issued last year; and what were the figures for the 10 main countries of origin.

Mr. Baldry: In 1993, 609,297 single entry visit visas, and 12,230 short term multiple entry visas, valid for six months, were issued to people seeking to make visits of six months or less.

The top countries where these visas were issued—not all were to nationals of the country concerned—were as follows:

Country	Number of applications issued
India	60,153
Russia	58,277
USA	39,589
Pakistan	36,647
Turkey	36,227
Thailand	30,606
Nigeria	24,470
Iran	16,835
China	15,687

The British Trade and Cultural Office in Taipei also processed 51,264 applications during 1993.

Jonathan Moyle

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the outcome of Her Majesty's Government's representation and investigations into the death of Jonathan Moyle.

Mr. Baldry: It is for the Chilean authorities to investigate the circumstances of Mr. Moyle's death. We have co-operated with them fully from the outset. On 9 September 1991 a verdict was announced that Mr. Moyle's death was "attributed to third party involvement where the identity of the third party cannot be ascertained".

The case is being investigated further and a report will be submitted to the Chilean Court of Appeal for consideration. We await the court's findings and in the light of those will consider what further action needs to be taken. An inquest into Mr. Moyle's death is also being conducted by HM coroner for the district of Exeter and East Devon.

Mutual Defence Agreement

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when the hon. Member for Blaenau, Gwent may expect a letter on the extension of article III to the Anglo-American mutual defence agreement on atomic matters promised in his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 1382; and if the letter will be published in the Official Report.

Mr. David Davies: I wrote to the hon. Member on 22 November. The text of the letter was as follows:

"I promised to write to you in response to your recent Parliamentary Questions on the 1958 UK/US Mutual Defence Agreement.

As you know, the 1958 Agreement enables the United Kingdom and the United States to co-operate on the use of atomic energy for mutual defence purposes. While the main part of the Agreement is not time-limited, Article III bis, which relates to the two-way exchange of special nuclear materials and other products, requires periodic amendment to ensure its continuing relevance and validity. The most recent amendment to this article, which was ratified in 1984, expires at the end of this year. We and the United States have agreed that there should be a further amendment to enable these exchanges to continue for another ten years.

Article VI of the Agreement addresses questions of the security and physical protection of the information and materials exchanged. While both the UK and US operate rigorous and effective materials control and accountancy arrangements, we have decided that it would be prudent to acknowledge explicitly the existence of these arrangements in the text of the Agreement. We have therefore agreed that Article VI should be amended accordingly.

The text of the amendment to the Agreement was agreed in May this year following discussions between officials of the two Governments. The 1994 amendment was laid before Parliament on 21 October. The Ponsonby Rule requires it to remain there for 21 sitting days before it can be ratified".

I am arranging for a copy of this letter to be placed in the Library of the House.

Algeria

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what attempts have been made to have an integrated European Union approach to the current political situation in Algeria; and what was the outcome.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: On 30 May 1994 the EU ministerial troika visited Algiers. The conclusions of the European Council at Corfu on 24–25 June 1994 included a passage on Algeria. The EU issued a joint statement on Algeria on 26 September 1994.

Unfortunately the cessation of violence and the dialogue for which the EU has called have not come about.

Oil Spills, Russia

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what help is being sent by Her Majesty's Government to Russia for oil spills in the north of Russia.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: We stand ready to help, but Russia has made it clear that no international assistance is required for the present.

Apes

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from the World Society for the Protection of Animals about the killing of the great apes of Africa; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I have received no representations from the World Society for the Protection of Animals about the killing of the great apes of Africa. It is a matter for the individual countries involved to pass the domestic legislation to prevent the killing of their apes. We are, however, always concerned by reports of cruelty to animals and encourage others to adopt our own high standards of animal welfare.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Baldry: FCO departments hold as many current files as is necessary for their operational needs. A proportion of these, consistent with security requirements, are top secret and secret. A breakdown of these could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Indonesia

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations Her Majesty's Government have made to the Government of Indonesia concerning the abuse of human rights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Our regular discussions with the Indonesians cover a wide range of issues, including human rights. With European Union partners, we have most recently expressed concern about the conviction and sentencing of Mr. Muchtar Pakpahan.

Science and Technology

Sir Kenneth Carlisle: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action has been taken to review the work of science and technology sections at British missions overseas to fulfil one of the commitments of the 1993 White Paper, "Realising our Potential: a Strategy for Science, Engineering and Technology".

Mr. Douglas Hogg: I am pleased to be able to inform the House that in the first half of this year an interdepartmental team from the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Department of Trade and Industry, the Office of Science and Technology and the British Council carried out a major review of science and technology work in diplomatic missions and British Council offices overseas. I have just endorsed the report of this review. It will be published on 1 December 1994. I have arranged for a copy of the report to be deposited in the Library of the House.

Gibraltar

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with the Chief Minister of Gibraltar on the position of Moroccan workers employed at the British military base who may become redundant in the near future; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: I have been asked to reply.

During my recent visit to Gibraltar I met the Gibraltar Government Minister for the Environment and Tourism and we discussed the announced reductions in the MOD presence in Gibraltar and the implications for locally entered staff, including Moroccan employees.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Moi University, Kenya

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether it was a condition of the British funding of the Margaret Thatcher library at Moi university in Kenya that there should be academic freedom at the university.

Mr. Baldry: The library will make an important contribution to learning and the output of graduates, particularly in science and technology, on which Kenya's development depends. While good government is a criteria in the allocation of United Kingdom aid, no specific condition was made relating to academic freedom when the project was approved in 1987.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what was the cost to the British funds of the construction of the Margaret Thatcher library at Moi university in Kenya.

Mr. Baldry: Construction costs paid for from the British aid programme, including architects' fees, amounted to £4.44 million. The overall project, including the provision of training and books, will be completed within the total agreed allocation of £8.373 million.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which British firms have benefited from the construction of the Margaret Thatcher library at Moi university in Kenya.

Mr. Baldry: Ove Arup and Partners were the project engineers. UBM Overseas Ltd. (UK) supplied the materials. In addition, Triad Architects Planners were involved in the design and supervision work.

Population Control

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on countries in which advertising campaigns are portraying those who do not use artificial contraception or choose to have large families as irresponsible or anti-social; if he will list those countries in which such campaigns are run; and if he classifies such campaigns as coercive.

Mr. Baldry: We do not have comprehensive information on advertising campaigns in this area.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what measures his Department takes to monitor population policies in countries in which projects connected with population receive funding from his Department.

Mr. Baldry: The Overseas Development Administration, or the relevant multilateral organisations to which it contributes, examine national population policies in the course of the design and management of projects which they fund; they will also seek to contribute, where appropriate, to further development of these policies.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps his Department takes to ensure that projects funded by his Department do not assist coercive population control strategies in countries where the projects are based.

Mr. Baldry: We do not support any population activities in which there is coercion of individuals to practise family planning, or to accept any particular type of contraception. We scrutinise proposals prior to funding and monitor their implementation to ensure that coercive approaches are avoided.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has regarding countries which tie education, health and development provision to contraceptive use or offer such provision on beneficial terms to contraceptive users; if he will list those countries where he is aware that this occurs; and whether he classifies such practices as coercive.

Mr. Baldry: We do not have detailed information. We believe that the use of contraception should be a matter of free individual choice. Governments were discouraged at the international conference on population and development from either the use of incentives or disincentives in promoting contraception use. We strongly supported this recommendation.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what information he has on projects funded by the core funds of the International Planned Parenthood Federation and the United Nations fund for population activities and what steps his Department takes to monitor these projects.

Mr. Baldry: The United Nations Population Fund 1993 inventory of population projects and the International Planned Parenthood Federation 1994 annual report supplement contain details of these organisations' activities. Copies of both these publications are in the Library of the House.

We regularly assess the policies and programmes of UNFPA and IPPF in relation to our policies.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he classifies as coercive methods taken by countries pursuing population policies, where projects are funded by his Department, to create peer pressure to use artificial contraception.

Mr. Baldry: We support activities which help people to be more aware of the choices available to them in family planning. We support the exercise of free individual choice and oppose coercive methods.

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the will list all grants for population policies and initiatives, given by his Department to projects, agencies or Governments giving in each case the amount of the grant, the terms of the project and the country in which the project is based.

Mr. Baldry: We will place in the Library a list of population and reproductive health projects and programmes supported under the aid programme in calendar year 1993.

Tanzania

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the current bilateral aid programme for Tanzania, set out by sector.

Mr. Baldry: In 1993–94, we disbursed £20.7 million to Tanzania through the bilateral aid programme. Of this, £10 million was in the form of conditional balance of payments support. The remainder was used to support projects in the following sectors:

	£ million
Natural resources	1.9
Economic infrastructure	3.8
Financial sector	0.2
Public administration	0.7
Education	1.3
Health and population	1.3
Miscellaneous	1.5

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the agreement he has entered into in respect of the modernisation of the port of Tanga, Tanzania.

Mr. Baldry: An exchange of letters formalising this project took place on 14 November. Under this agreement, ODA will support rehabilitation and maintenance work at Tanga Port, and provide training and supervision. The cost to the British aid programme will be £4.69 million. The project is expected to be completed in 1997.

EDUCATION

Bullying

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what assessment she has made of the extent of bullying of disabled pupils in schools; and what specific guidance she gives to schools and local education authorities on this matter.

Mr. Forth: Ofsted's framework for inspection requires inspecting teams to obtain the views of pupils, parents and teachers on the incidence of bullying and the school's response to it. Reports should include an evaluation of the measures taken by the school to prevent and eliminate bullying.

The Department's anti-bullying pack, "Don't Suffer in Silence", published in September, included practical guidance on strategies that schools can adopt to combat bullying of pupils, including those with special educational needs. In addition, the Department stressed the importance of effective action against bullying in guidance on pupil behaviour and discipline, sent to local education authorities and all maintained schools in May as part of the "Pupils with Problems" series of circulars.

Disabled People (Access)

Mr. David Nicholson: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what is her estimate of the total cost of making 50 per cent., 75 per cent. and 100 per cent. of (a) primary schools and (b) secondary schools fully accessible to disabled people, such accessibility to include the provision of appropriate toilet facilities.

Mr. Forth: The best source of cost information is an independent report from Coopers and Lybrand issued in April 1993. These estimates, based on a large sample of schools, indicated that the costs for providing physical access to all primary schools would be about £400 million and to all secondary schools about £1,300 million. The survey estimated that to make 50 per cent. of secondary schools 100 per cent. accessible would be £251 million; it did not include analogous figures for primary schools. It did not provide full figures for 75 per cent. of schools in either sector. These data include the cost of ramps, lifts and disabled toilets. They do not include corner widening, means of escape or specialist furniture.

Ofsted

Mr. Blunkett: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what were the targets for the number of school inspections to be undertaken by Ofsted in (a) 1993–94 and (b) in the current school year; and if she will break the targets down for (i) primary schools, (ii) secondary schools, (iii) special schools and (iv) sixth-form colleges;

(2) how may (a) primary schools, (b) secondary schools, (c) special schools and (d) sixth-form colleges were inspected by Ofsted in (i) 1993–94 and (ii) in the current school year.

Mr. Forth: These are matters for her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Schools, who heads the independent Office for Standards in Education. I have asked Mr. Woodhead to write to the hon. Member.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files her Department holds.

Mr. Boswell: The Department does not hold any files classified as top secret; 78 of the Department's holding of approximately 265,000 files are classified as secret.

Student Loans Company

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for Education which right hon. and hon. members have visited the headquarters of the Student Loans Company since it was set up.

Mr. Boswell: This is a matter for the Student Loans Company. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Dorrell: My Department currently has in excess of 120,000 files, of which approximately 300 are classified as secret and four top secret.

Indemnity Undertakings

Mr. Duncan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage how many indemnity undertakings were given by Departments under section 16 of the National Heritage Act 1980 for the six month period ending 30 September 1994; and what is the value of any contingent liabilities in respect such undertakings given at any time which remain outstanding as at 30 September 1994.

Mr. Dorrell: The information that my hon. Friend requests is as follows:

In the six-month period ended 30 September 1994, the following undertakings to indemnify were given by the relevant departments for items on loan to national and non-national institutions:

Department of National Heritage	503
Scottish Office Education Department	108
Welsh Office Education Department	39
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	19

The value of contingent liabilities in respect of such undertakings given at any time and outstanding at 30 September 1994 are:

Department of National Heritage	1,730,975,529
Scottish Office Education Department	394,655,574
Welsh Office Education Department	36,265,802
Department of Education for Northern Ireland	4,573,154

National Lottery

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what consultations he has had with the Millennium Fund Commission concerning its powers in relation (a) to the choice of schemes for financial support in Wales, (b) to amending any such schemes which are applicants for assistance and (c) to amending the constitutions and personnel of sponsoring bodies of such applications; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Millennium Commission was consulted on directions issued under section 26(1) of the National Lottery etc. Act 1993 concerning matters to be taken into account when considering applications and, under section 26(3), for securing the proper management and control of lottery proceeds. Within this framework, it is for each distributing body to establish their own processes for handling applications and, in my capacity as Secretary of State, I have had no specific discussions with the commission on any of these matters. As chairman of the commission, however, I am directly involved in the development of its policies and procedures. The Millennium Commission issued detailed guidance for applicants on November 28 which will explain how applications for funding should be prepared and submitted.

Mr. Alex Carlile: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make it his policy to ensure an increase of national lottery sales outlets in Montgomeryshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 29 November 1994]: This is an operational matter for Camelot Group plc. I have therefore asked Peter Davis, the director general of the national lottery, who is responsible for regulating the operation of the lottery, to write to the hon. and learned Gentleman, and to place copies his response in the Libraries of the House.

Open Government

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will make a statement on the charging policy of his Department and the agencies for which he is responsible in respect of inquiries under the code of practice on access to Government.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 22 November 1994]: In line with guidance on charging produced by the Office of Public Service and Science, which recognises the diversity of cost and operational structure across the range of bodies implementing the code, my Department has developed the following scheme of charges for information under the code of practice on access to Government information.

My Department and the two agencies for which I am responsible make no charge for responding to straightforward enquiries. Charges will, however, be made where the cost of responding to the inquiry would exceed a threshold—currently £100. This will normally represent half of one day's work charged at an average cost for staff undertaking the work.

Above the £100 threshold, charges may be made according to the average daily rates of the staff undertaking the work. Charges are designed to cover, but not exceed, the cost of processing the request for information and are payable whether or not the request for information can be supplied in full. Where it is proposed to make a charge, the Department and its agencies will write to the inquirer and ask them to pay in advance for the material requested.

Those responding to inquiries will at all stages keep applicants informed of the likely charges to be made by providing an estimated charge, which is normally payable before further work is undertaken.

EMPLOYMENT

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Miss Widdecombe: Ministers intend to send an estimated 480 cards this year. They would cost (a) £330 to buy and (b) £86 to post. The information at (c) is not available. I intend to place a copy of the official card, which supports the Cancer Relief Macmillan Fund, in the Library in the new year.

Employment of Children

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has substantially to increase the penalties for employing children or allowing children who are under age to work in factories or businesses.

Mr. Oppenheim: Breaches of the Employment of Women, Children and Young Persons Act 1920, which prohibits children from working in factories, already attract a maximum fine of £5,000. Local byelaws which set strict rules on the employment of children provide for a maximum penalty of £1,000.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Spellar: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many cases before industrial tribunals in the last year have been heard before a chairman alone.

Mr. Oppenheim: The Industrial Tribunals (Constitution and Rules of Procedure) Regulations 1993 gave effect as from 16 December 1993 to provisions in the Trade Union Reform and Employment Rights Act 1993 which empower industrial tribunal chairmen to hear certain cases without lay members. From 16 December 1993 until the end of October 1994, 3,148 cases have been heard before chairmen sitting alone.

Unemployment

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people between the ages of 16 and 25 years in Lewisham, East (a) are registered unemployed and (b) have been unemployed for 12 months or more; and what are these figures expressed as a percentage in that age group in that area.

Mr. Oppenheim: In October 1994 the total number of unemployed claimants aged under 25 years in Lewisham East stood at 1,257 down 6 per cent. on the year, and the number of the latter who were unemployed for over a year stood at 398, down 10 per cent. on the year.

Claimant unemployment rates by age are only available nationally and are publish in table 2.15 of the Employment Gazette, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many people between the ages of 16 and 25 years are registered as unemployed in each of the London boroughs; and what the figures are as a percentage of that age group in each borough and in London as a whole; how many have been unemployed for 12 months; and what this figure is expressed as a percentage in that age group in each borough and in London as a whole.

Mr. Oppenheim: Claimant unemployment rates by age are only available nationally and are published in table 2.15 of the Employment Gazette. Information on the numbers of claimant unemployed in each London borough, analysed by age and duration of claimant, is available for the months of January, April, July and October and can be obtained from the NOMIS database in the Library.

Non-EU Employees

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits have been issued in connection with LEAR Seating Corporation in Coventry in the last six months.

Mr. Oppenheim: A total of 18 work permits have been issued to Lear Seating (UK) Ltd. within the last six months.

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many work permits were issued to residents in the United States of America, Canada and Mexico to undertake temporary work in the United kingdom in each of the last three years.

Mr. Oppenheim: The number of work permits issued to nationals of the United States, Canada and Mexico in each of the last three years is shown in the following table:

Year	USA	Canada	Mexico
1991	10,851	742	51
1992	11,617	916	55
1993	11,633	1,004	75

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received concerning the need to employ temporary labour from outside the European Union from LEAR Seating Corporation in Coventry.

Mr. Oppenheim: I have received no representations concerning this issue other than applications for work permits.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Miss Widdecombe: The Employment Department group holds (a) 24 top secret files and (b) 1,033 secret files.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Attorney-General how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

The Attorney-General: The number of current top secret and secret files held in the Departments for which I am responsible is as follows:

	Top Secret	Secret
Legal Secretariat to the Law Officers	29	326
Crown Prosecution Service	2	14
Treasury Solicitor's Department	10	101
Serious Fraud Office	—	—

Pergau Dam

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what involvement he had in the Foreign Secretary's defence in the recent Pergau dam court case.

The Attorney-General: By convention, the Law Officers do not normally disclose whether they have been asked to advise on a particular issue or the substance of any advice that they may have given.

Victims Compensation Scheme

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Attorney-General what involvement he had in the Home Secretary's defence in the recent victims compensation scheme court case.

The Attorney-General: By convention, the Law Officers do not normally disclose whether they have been asked to advise on a particular issue or the substance of any advice that they may have given.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Contracting Out

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will list all those instances where contracting out of a function or service, previously provided in-house, has resulted in an identifiable improvement in the quality of the service provided.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The following list shows functions contracted out under the competing for quality programme in the period from 1 April 1992 to 31 December 1993 where departments have informed the efficiency unit that an improved quality of service has been specified.

ENVIRONMENT

Retailers (Planning Permission)

Mr. Thomason: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to make it easier for retailers to get planning permission for new sites in or near town centres.

Mr. Gummer: As part of their strategy to revitalise their town centres I have encouraged local authorities to assess the capacity of their town centre for further retail development and to promote retail development in or on the edge of town centres through their development plan.

Home Renovation Grants

Mr. O'Hara: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many home renovation grants were made in 1984, 1989 and the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: In 1984 and 1989 local authorities awarded 229,000 and 98,000 home improvement grants respectively. In 1993 90,000 grants were given under the new provisions of part VIII of the Local Government and Housing Act 1989.

Town Centres

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what assessment he has made of the extent to which modern supermarkets in the right place can improve local services and attract new investment to the town centre economy.

Mr. Gummer: Retail developments in town centres increase the choice, widen the opportunities available, and add to the attraction of those centres. Supermarkets located in the right place, in or next to town centres, can provide the anchor for other types of retailing, and thus help ensure the viability of town centres.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps are being undertaken to encourage the revitalisation of town centres.

Mr. Gummer: I have taken a number of measures, including:

issuing guidance to local planning authorities to focus retail development in or next to town centres through policies and proposals in their development plans; advising on good practice for local authorities to help them implement this guidance; and encouraging positive promotion of town centres and town centre management.

I intend to consider this matter further, among other issues, at a symposium on quality in town and country which I am hosting on 12 December.

Mr. Key: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to issue new guidance on change of use of buildings in town centres.

Sir Paul Beresford: Current planning policy guidance on the change of use of buildings in town centres is contained in planning policy guidance note No. 6, "Town Centres and Retail Developments", issued in July 1993. There are no current proposals to issue new guidance.

There are, however, proposals to extend permitted development rights so that the use of space above shops can be changed to a single flat or back again without a planning application, provided there is no material alteration to the outside of the building.

Homelessness

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many homeless families there are (a) nationally, (b) in Greater London and (c) in Redbridge; how many there were in 1979; and what plans he has to reduce the numbers.

Mr. Curry: During the 12 months ending June this year 128,062 households were accepted as statutorily homeless by local authorities in England, 30,920 by the London boroughs and 586 by the London borough of Redbridge. The equivalent figures for 1979 were 55,530, 16,400 and 311. The number of acceptances over the previous 12 months has now fallen for nine successive quarters.

Mr. Hendry: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the most recent homelessness figures.

Mr. Curry: The most recent figures show that for nine quarters in succession English local authorities have accepted fewer households as statutorily homeless than in the same period 12 months previously. Moreover, the number of households in temporary accommodation fell 13 per cent. and the number in bed-and-breakfast hotels went down 27 per cent., compared with 12 months earlier. I find these figures encouraging.

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will make a statement about the Government's plans in respect of homelessness legislation.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction told the House on 18 July 1994, Official Report, columns 21-23, we intend to introduce legislation when parliamentary time permits.

Food Retailers

Mr. Hawkins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to encourage genuine competition between different food retailers.

Mr. Gummer: My policy is to locate retail development in or near town centres where the proximity of competing businesses facilitates competition from which consumers can benefit.

The market place remains the main stimulus to competition. Through planning policy guidance notes Nos. 6 and 13, competition is being encouraged to take place in a way that reinforces rather than undermines the vitality and viability of existing town centres.

Environmental Protection

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made in environmental protection in the last year.

Mr. Atkins: Significant progress has been made over the last twelve months. This will be extensively reported both in my Department's annual report early next year and in the annual White Paper report on the environment which I will publish in spring.

Environmentally Friendly Transport

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussion he has had with the Secretary of State for Transport to encourage the use of environmentally friendly transport.

Sir Paul Beresford: My right hon. Friend regularly discusses matters concerning transport and the environment with our right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport. Most recently, we discussed the Government's initial response to the report on transport produced by the Royal Commission on environmental pollution.

Council House Sales

Sir David Knox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council houses have been sold to sitting tenants in England since May 1979.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: More than 1.4 million tenants bought their homes from English local authorities and new towns between April 1979 and June 1994.

Housing Association Rents

Ms Coffey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the current levels of housing association rents.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have received 230 representations concerning the level of housing association rents since 1 January 1994.

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage increase in rents for new housing association assured tenancies between 1989 and 1994; and what has been the changes in retail prices index over the same period.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Average rents for new housing association assured tenancies increased by 84.5 per cent. between 1989 and the first half of 1994. Over the same period, the proportion of the total housing association stock represented by these lettings rose from 10 per cent. to 14 per cent.

The retail prices index increased by 24.4 per cent. over the same period.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Robert Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had with local authorities on this year's standard spending assessment settlement.

Mr. Curry: I have had discussions with the local authority associations in the Consultative Council on Local Government Finance. Ministers have also received delegations from individual local authorities, including one from Coventry city council on 24 November 1994.

Private Housing Renewal Programmes

Mr. Rooker: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to make a statement on the outcome of his consultation on the future of private housing renewal programmes.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I am still considering the options for longer-term changes to the house renovation grant system following last year's public consultation. We will make an announcement in due course.

River Thames

Mr. Dunn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how the River Thames can be put to better use.

Mr. Gummer: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave earlier to my hon. Friend the member for Wimbledon (Dr. Goodson-Wickes).

Packaging Waste

Mr. Tredinnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made recently to increase the percentage of packaging waste recycled.

Mr. Atkins: We have challenged the packaging industry to devise an industry-led scheme to substantially increase the recovery and recycling of packaging waste by the year 2000. The industry has published its proposals which would lead to a doubling of packaging value recovery levels to nearly 60 per cent. by the year 2000.

Local Government Finance

Mr. Beith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received about the effects on services in Northumberland of the standard spending assessment and capping systems.

Mr. Curry: My Department has received a large number of letters on this issue.

Negative Equity

Mr. William O'Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his latest estimate of the number of people trapped in negative housing equity; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Curry: Estimates of negative equity vary. Based on Department of the Environment house price data, in the third quarter of 1994 an estimated 644,310 households were affected by negative equity. This is a fall of almost 9 per cent. on the second quarter and is 47 per cent. lower than the peak in the fourth quarter of 1992.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, column 66, if he will provide a regional breakdown of households suffering negative equity and an estimate of the sums involved.

Mr. Robert B Jones: An estimate of the number of households affected by negative equity and the value of negative equity by region based on Department of the Environment house price data, is as follows:

Region	Number of households (thousands)	Value (millions)
South East	346	-1713
Greater London	80	-248
South West	115	-376
East Anglia	51	-237
East Midlands	11	-16
West Midlands	11	-14
Wales	4	-3
Yorkshire and Humberside	17	-16
North West	7	-3
North	1	—
Scotland	—	—
Northern Ireland	1	-1
United Kingdom	644	-2,628

Arts, Museums and Libraries

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations he has had on the effect of local government reorganisation on the funding of arts, museums and libraries by local authorities.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Local Government Commission consults bodies connected with the arts, museums and library services before making recommendations for the structure of local government. We allow time to receive and consider representations from interested parties on those recommendations before taking decisions on them. My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for National Heritage is consulting representatives of the local authority associations and expert bodies in these fields with a view to issuing guidance, where necessary, to new authorities.

Water Pollution

Mr. Hinchliffe: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what steps he is taking to reduce pollution in rivers.

Sir Paul Beresford: We have ensured that the National Rivers Authority has the powers and the resources to maintain and improve the quality of our rivers. Around 90 per cent. of rivers in England and Wales are of good or fair quality.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has about the main sources of (a) pesticides and (b) phosphates in the water supply, given in order of importance with the percentage contribution made by each source.

Mr. Atkins: The pesticides most frequently detected in supplies are atrazine, simazine, diuron, isoproturon, mecoprop and chlorotoluron. The first three were mainly used for weed control in non-agricultural situations such as roads, railways and on other hard surfaces. However, the approvals for the use of atrazine and simazine in these situations were withdrawn in August 1993. The other three pesticides are almost exclusively used for weed control in cereals. While concentrations of individual pesticides in drinking water sometimes exceed the legal requirement of 0.1 µg/litre, there is no evidence that any of these contraventions was of such a magnitude or duration as to endanger the health of consumers. Investment is in hand to deal with these exceedances.

Phosphates can be found in water supplies derived from surface water sources; groundwater sources usually contain insignificant levels. Phosphates originate mainly from sewage effluents, industrial effluents or from agricultural run-off from inorganic fertilisers.

Figures for the percentage contribution for pesticides and phosphates from each source are not available as the respective amounts vary between rural and urban environments and between ground water and surface water sources and at different times of the year.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost in the last three years to water and river authorities of making water supplies drinkable.

Mr. Atkins: Water industry capital expenditure on the drinking water compliance programme during the period 1990–91 to 1993–94 was around £2.5 billion at 1993–94 prices.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of removing (a) pesticides and (b) phosphates from the water supply in each of the last three years.

Mr. Atkins: Information is not available in the form requested. However I understand that capital expenditure by water companies in England and Wales on new treatment to remove pesticides from water put into supply was £122 million in 1992–93 and that in 1993–94 and 1994–95 companies were planning to spend £170 million and £207 million respectively. There is not normally a requirement to remove phosphate from water before it is put into supply as drinking water.

Integrated Pollution Control

Mr. Brandreth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what changes are to be made to the scheme of fees and charges for integrated pollution control operated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Atkin: Minor changes to the HMIP Integrated Pollution Control Fees and Charges Scheme 1994–95 take effect from 1 December 1994. They are consequent upon changes in the governing legislation made by Statutory Instruments Nos. 1271—The Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances etc.) (Amendment) Regulations 1994, and 1329—The Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances etc.) (Amendment) (No. 2) Regulations 1994. Copies of the amendment to the scheme are being placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what response he has made to each recommendation proposed by the National Association of Citizens Advice Bureaux in its document entitled "Taxing Times, CAB Evidence on the Council Tax", dated September 1994.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My hon. Friend the Minister of State for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration wrote to the chief executive of the national association on 17 October responding to each recommendation which relates to the policy and legislative framework of the council tax. A copy of his letter has been placed in the Library of the House.

Air Pollution

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what proposals he has to tackle severe air pollution, including winter smog.

Mr. Atkins: Many measures are already in place to reduce emissions of pollutants into the air. These include catalytic converters, which have been required on all cars since the end of 1992. As a result, the risk of episodes of high pollution is expected to decrease over the next few years. In March, the Government published a consultation paper, "Improving Air Quality", which initiated wide-ranging and constructive debate. The Government intend to publish then proposals shortly.

Women's Refuges

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress he has made towards achieving a comprehensive network of women's refuge provision; what was the outcome of the consideration by Ministers of the need for improved co-ordination of refuge provision; what information he has about local authorities without a refuge in their area; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The provision of women's refuge is best decided by local authorities and other agencies taking into account issues such as the local supply of housing available for short-term use in emergency situations. The ministerial group on domestic violence met on 17 May and discussed, among other issues, the need for a centrally co-ordinated policy on refuge provision. The Group agreed to consider this further at its next meeting.

The Department does not hold information about the number of local authorities without a refuge in their area.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: Officials have been asked to investigate the feasibility of publishing a range of departmental information through Internet. No firm decision has yet been taken by the Department to use this service.

Race Bank

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he intends to publish the Hull university report on the dredging on Race Bank; and if he will place a copy in the Library.

Mr. Atkins: The report was commissioned by the National Rivers Authority and it is up to them to decide whether or not to publish it and whether to place a copy in the House Library.

Rented Housing

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the total output of rented homes by housing associations and local authorities in the current year; and what the figure was for 1978–79.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment gave to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Alfed Morris) on 29 November 1994.

Construction Industry

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken within his Department to support his sponsorship of the construction industry.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Following a reorganisation of sponsorship activities last year, my Department has undertaken, and is continuing to undertake, an enhanced range of activities to encourage the success and competitiveness of the construction industry both at home and overseas.

These include:

Consultation arrangements between the Department and the industry, comprising twice-yearly meetings between the Secretary of State for the Environment and senior industry representatives on strategic issues; regular briefing meetings between the industry representatives and Ministers on specific construction-related topics, thus enabling Ministers to hear industry's views and concerns at first hand; meetings of a consultative group set up to discuss current issues and concerns at official level; a consultative committee on construction industry statistics set up to discuss initiatives on the provision of statistical and market intelligence information; and the publication of "Construction Monitor", a monthly newsletter published with Building magazine, containing European, United Kingdom and statistical information.

Sponsorship activities, including helping to take forward the implementation of the Latham Report into the construction industry's procurement and contractual arrangements; progressing the practical implementation of the Construction Products Directive; the establishment with the industry of the Construction Procurement Group which aims to help reduce the United Kingdom's excessive trade deficit in construction products; the launch of a Construction Benchmarking Challenge which is providing financial assistance towards the establishment of four benchmarking clubs; carrying out strategic analyses of specific sectors of the industry to identify ways of improving Government support; proposals to promote prompt payment arrangements in Government construction contracts through use of standard contract conditions; provision of an improved range of statistics and other information to help industry decision makers; policy opposition to the use of on-demand bonds; and proposals to reform the Architects' Registration Acts to simplify the current system.

Research and Innovation initiatives, including the establishment of a whole industry research strategy group to develop a joint Government industry strategy for research and innovation; establishment of a construction industry panel under the Government's Technology Foresight programme; increasing the proportion of total research and development spend allocated to collaborative projects funded jointly with industry; the launch of the construction industry European research club with strong DoE encouragement to help the United Kingdom construction industry to increase its participation in European research, and gain increased access to funding; the launch of the LINK/IDAC integration in design and construction programme to encourage improvements in the quality and competitiveness of the United Kingdom construction industry through academic/industry research into the construction process; and support for the Construction Quality Forum which seeks to improve quality in construction through information exchange.

Export Services, including carrying out six trade missions in 1994, the setting up of a number of building material task forces; the production of a new video to promote the British construction industry around the world; and the organisation of inward visits by overseas clients.

Ealing Council

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what were the financial balances of Ealing council in (a) May 1990 and (b) May 1994; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Ealing council reported a deficit in reserves of £12,000 at 1 April 1990 and a surplus in reserves at 1 April 1994 of £40,891,000 (or £43,682,000 including those earmarked for local management of schools).

Single Regeneration Budget

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many bids under the single regeneration budget have been received by his Department; and what is the amount of money that is to be allocated.

Mr. Curry: A total of 469 bids were received by Government offices in the regions for funding from the single regeneration budget. A total of £125 million will be allocated to bidders in respect of successful projects in 1995–96, subject to satisfactory performance.

Mr. Hardy: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what payment will be made to support small businesses under the single regeneration budget in 1995–96; and what is the percentage difference from the provision made for this purpose in the current year.

Mr. Curry: Support for small businesses is one of the priorities of the single regeneration budget and commitments from constituents programmes, including the business start-up scheme and regional enterprise grant, will continue to be honoured in 1995–96. The overall level of resources given to support small businesses in 1995–96 will depend upon the outcome of the first bidding round.

Repossessions

Mr. Khabra: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate of the number of households likely to lose their home through repossession for mortgage arrears in the next 12 months.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The Department does not make forecasts of the number of households likely to lose their home through repossession for mortgage arrears.

The latest available figures on mortgage possessions were published by the Council for Mortgage Lenders in July. These showed that in the first half of 1994, 25,020 properties were taken into possession by mortgage lenders, representing 0.24 per cent. of all mortgaged properties. This compared with 31,780 in the first half of 1993, and 26,760 in the second half of 1993.

The figures for the second half of 1994 and 1994 as a whole will be published by the CML on Wednesday 25 January 1995.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he proposes to act upon the recommendations of the advisory group on litter concerning dog fouling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Atkins: The period for consultation on the Advisory Group's recommendations ended on 14 October and we have been considering the comments made. The Government's response to the advisory group will be made in due course.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My Department holds 14 top secret and some 1,900 secret files. These represent 0.1 per cent. of all files held.

Council Rents

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish the average levels of council rent in each London borough at constant prices for each year since 1979.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have today placed in the Library a table showing the average weekly local authority rents for each London borough for the financial years 1988–89 to 1994–95, expressed in constant prices. Information for earlier years could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Safer Cities

Mr. Heald: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will announce the selection of contractors to manage the next wave of safer cities projects.

Sir Paul Beresford: I am pleased to announce that, following a tender competition, contractors have been selected to manage the 20 new safer cities projects which my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction announced on 15 July 1994.

After careful evaluation of the tenders, three organisations have been chosen to run the projects: Crime Concern, the National Association for the Care and Resettlement of Offenders and the Society of Voluntary Associates. All three organisations have significant experience in crime prevention, project management, and working with voluntary agencies.

Crime Concern will manage projects in Bolton, Hackney, Kensington and Chelsea, Portsmouth, Southwark and Westminster.

NACRO will manage projects in Bournemouth, Brighton, Easington, Great Grimsby, Merseyside, Norwich, Oxford, Sandwell, Scunthorpe, Wansbeck and York.

SOVA will manage projects in Camden, Lincoln and Newham.

We expect preliminary work to begin December, and projects will start to come on stream early in the new year.

Departmental Property

Mr. Barry Field : To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will announce targets for the reduction of Government Departments' empty residential property; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: In response to the report of the task force on Government Departments' empty houses, the Government undertook to monitor empty residential property owned by Departments and to set annual targets. Targets for reduction in 1994–95 are set out in the table.

	Total stock at 1 April 1994	Empty at 1 April 1994	Empty as percentage of total stock	Target for reduction of number of empty properties held at 1 April 1994[1]
Department of Transport	3,845	887	23	484
Home Office	4,524[2]	498	11	335
Ministry of Defence	68,106	11,006	16	3,550[3]
Department of Health	15,000[4]	1,800[5]	12	700
Scottish Office	1,601[4]	158	10	60
Welsh Office	239	43[7]	18	37

Notes:

[1] Includes properties to be sold, leased or reoccupied.

[2] Excludes figures for the provincial police authorities.

[3] Targets relate to stock figures at 1 April 1994. More properties will become empty during the year as others are occupied or disposed of.

[4] Most up-to-date figures available are as at 31 December 1992.

[5] Excludes bed-spaces in hostels.

[6] NHS figures included in the stock are as at 1 April 1993.

[7] Excludes properties awaiting demolition or conversion to non-residential use.

We will monitor performance and publish achievement against these targets at the end of the financial year.

My Department will shortly issue revised guidance for Government Departments on how to secure better use of their empty residential property. This will reflect the recommendations made by the task force. The Welsh Office will issue similar guidance separately.

Notes

1. Includes properties to be sold, leased or reoccupied.
2. Excludes figures for the provincial police authorities.
3. Targets relate to stock figures at 1 April 1994. More properties will become empty during the year as others are occupied or disposed of.
4. Most up-to-date figures available are as at 31 December 1992.
5. Excludes bed-spaces in hostels.
6. NHS figures included in the stock are as at 1 April 1993.
7. Excludes properties awaiting demolition or conversion to non-residential use.

Countryside Stewardship Scheme

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those countryside stewardship scheme sites which have been withdrawn from the scheme for allowing additional public access, the grounds on which each decision was taken, the date when payments ceased and whether the Government will seek repayment of moneys already spent for which the contracted services or public access was not satisfactorily delivered.

Mr. Atkins [holding answer 23 November 1994]: Information about countryside stewardship agreements with access elements, which have been either terminated or amended through the removal of the access element, is given below. There are various reasons for the termination or amendment of agreements, including the sale of the property, the death or bankruptcy of the scheme participant, or non-compliance with the conditions of the agreement. Payments under the scheme are made annually in arrears and in eight cases payments had not been made before the agreements came to an end or were amended. In other cases, payments were withdrawn. In no case was repayment of grant required. The management of the scheme, including the negotiation of agreements with scheme participants, is a matter for the Countryside Commission.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if she will list the management allowances payments made to general practitioner fund-holding practices and practices preparing to be fundholders (a) by value and (b) in total for each (i) family health services authority and (ii) region.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is given in the table. GP fundholding has delivered many improvements in quality of care for patients. The costs of the management allowance—at about 2 per cent. of budgets set presents excellent value for money. These figures are only available for those years for which audited health board accounts have been completed.

Highlands and Islands Objective/Status

Mr. Charles Kennedy: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on progress towards the implementation of agricultural measures under Highlands and Islands objective 1 status, following his Department's consultation process which ended on 31 May; if he will indicate the number and range of responses received; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The Department received 17 responses earlier this year to its consultation paper on the proposed Highlands and Islands Agricultural Programme from local authorities, agricultural and wildlife organisations, and a range of other public and private bodies. Most of the responses broadly welcomed the proposals. The Highlands and Islands agricultural programme, modified in the light of comments received and discussions with the European Commission, was approved for European Community funding on 29 July. The approved programme has three elements: the agricultural business improvement scheme, which is expected to open for applications towards the end of December; the crofting township development scheme, which should start next January; and the marketing scheme, which should come into operation next spring.

Health Care International

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rough estimate of the cost of adapting the Health Care International hospital for use as an NHS hospital, referred to in his answer of 31 October, Official Report, column 964.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The very rough estimate given was at least £25 million. The actual figure would of course depend on the specification.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Lang: My Department employs two special advisers, although one post is presently vacant.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, which starts at £19,503. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Rent Acts

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will consider extending the amendment of the definition of residential occupier in terms of section 22(5) of the Rent (Scotland) Act 1984, in relation to any premises to a person occupying such premises and willing to make payment of a rental in respect thereof who has been denied security of tenure by his or her landlord for the express object of eviction.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: There are no plans at present to change the definition of residential occupier.

Glasgow North Ltd.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what is the most recent deficit of Glasgow North Ltd.;

(2) how many staff are currently employed by Glasgow North Ltd.; and if he will place a list of their grades in the Library;

(3) what amounts have been given to date in interest free loans to the staff of Glasgow North Ltd.;

(4) how many senior officials of Glasgow North Ltd. resigned in the last two weeks;

(5) how many visits (a) to the United States of America and (b) elsewhere abroad representatives of Glasgow North Ltd. made in the past two years; and what was the cost per person and duration of such trips.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: These are matters for Glasgow North Limited. The Secretary of State has no locus in the management of the company.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will place in the Library a list of the urban aid projects for which Glasgow North Ltd. has responsibility and also indicating (a) how many staff have been allocated to each project and (b) the capital and revenue costs for each.

Lords James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Urban programme projects currently managed by Glasgow North Ltd.

Project title	Number of staff	Capital costs £	Annual revenue costs (for four years) £
Regeneration through reskilling	9	12,900	222,800

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the budget submitted for the IT Bus project owned by Glasgow North Ltd.; and what was the eventual cost.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The costs submitted for the IT bus project in the 1993–94 urban programme competition were as follows:

Capital expenditure	90,000
Annual revenue expenditure (for four years)	71,300

I understand from Glasgow district council, the sponsoring local authority, that the level of urban programme capital funds expended on the project was within budget.

Mr. Michael J. Martin: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what urban aid projects have been awarded to Glasgow North Ltd. in the years (a) 1992–93 and (b) 1993–94; and if he will give the value of these projects.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is as follows:

Project title	Capital cost £	Annual revenue cost (for four years) £
1992–93
Community economic development project	4,160	71,000
1993–94
Rosemount business start-up units	44,500	43,940
Information technology bus	90,000	71,300

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lang: My Department's press releases are already available via Internet. My officials are considering the provision of further selected information.

Historic Scotland

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland for what reasons Historic Scotland was denied access on payment, to the direct labour force of English Heritage based at Berwick, for work on sites in the Tweed valley.

Mr. Lang: Under the National Heritage Act 1983, English Heritage does not have powers to carry out works on sites situated outside England.

Private Hospitals

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland which health boards in Scotland have purchased treatment from private sector hospitals; which private hospitals have had such contracts; which medical specialities and what number of patients have been involved; and what is the value of such contracts.

Mr. Lang [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Centrally available information on NHS patients treated in Private Hospitals is shown in the tables. The information shown refers to health board of residence and may include treatments purchased by GP fundholders.

Newcastle Disease

Mr. Morley: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many cases of Newcastle disease were identified in each year since 1985.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 November 1994]: There have been no recorded cases of Newcastle disease in Scotland over this period.

Forests

Mr. Tipping: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many and which local authorities have responded to the consultation paper, "Our Forests, the Way Ahead;" and how many and which local authorities have expressed reservations about the proposal to continue with the disposal of woodland and the loss of public access in these woodlands.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 28 November 1994]: Four local authorities in Scotland have responded: Highland regional council, Kincardine and Deeside district council, Midlothian district council and Strathclyde regional council. Each of these local authorities has expressed reservations about the proposals for securing public access to woodlands sold by the Forestry Commission, although the sale of woodlands does not, of course, necessarily lead to a loss of public access.

WALES

Drugs

Mr. Llwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) what was the budget for 1992–93 for the education of young people about the effects of substance abuse and drug taking;

(2) what was the budget for 1993–94 for the education of young people about the effects of substance abuse and drug taking.

Mr. Richards: Drug prevention work is undertaken by a number of agencies from both the statutory and voluntary sectors, which receive funds from various sources. In 1992–93 the Welsh Office made available some £200,000 to help fund activities concerned with the prevention of drug misuse. The budget for 1993–94 was nearly £240,000. Funding is also available to local education authorities for health education (including drugs) under the grants for education support and training programme.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will establish a separate environmental protection agency for Wales.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Government feel that a joint agency will be most effective in addressing current problems, most of which are common to England and Wales.

Concessionary Travel

Mr. Llywd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will assist local authorities to extend the provision of concessionary travel to pensioners; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: Local councils in Wales already provide concessionary fares schemes for pensioners. Money from the taxpayer for such schemes is provided through the local government revenue settlement. It is for individual councils to decide on the financial support that they wish to allocate for this purpose.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Redwood: The information is as follows: (a) five (b) 84. These represent 0.008 per cent. of the Department's holding of files.

Dog Fouling

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he proposes to act upon the recommendations of the advisory group on litter concerning dog fouling; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given today by my right hon. Friend the Minister for the Environment and Countryside.

Housing Finance

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he will consult on his housing revenue account subsidy proposals for 1995–96; and what his proposals will be.

Mr. Gwilym Jones: The Welsh Office has issued draft housing revenue account subsidy determinations for 1995–96 today. Local authorities and other consultees have been invited to let us have their views by 22 December 1994. I will be placing copies of the draft determinations together with estimates of guideline rents and management and maintenance allowances in the Library of the House. The proposed average guideline rent for 1995–96 is £33.58 a week. Increases range between £1.82 and £2.82 a week according to the estimated capital values of each authority's stock.

The proposed average management and maintenance allowance per dwelling would increase by 3.75 per cent to £854, an increase of £31. Across Wales the total estimated management and maintenance allowances would increase to nearly £177 million. Thirty-two councils would have a higher allowance than in 1994–95 while no authority will have a lower per dwelling allowance than this year.

These proposals strike a reasonable balance between the need to contain public expenditure and the need to ensure that housing is provided for council tenants at acceptable cost. The overall percentage increase in guideline rents is lower than in 1994–95.

Local authorities determine their own expenditure and set their own rents, but I hope that they will follow the Government's lead in adopting a balanced approach.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by his Department and Government agencies answerable to his Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. Hague: The cost of decorations, Christmas parties and other festive activities is not normally met out of departmental budgets. For details of total expenditure on official hospitality, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given on 28 October 1994, Official Report, column 857. Disaggregated information of the kind requested is not available.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many official Christmas cards he and his Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if he will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card he intends to send this year.

Mr. Hague: Ministers at this Department intend to send 930 official Christmas cards in 1994, at a cost of £384.75, inclusive of value added tax. Postage costs are estimated at a maximum of £176.70. Staff time spent on the process will be minimal.

Copies of the official Christmas card are on order and so not yet available. Copies will be placed in the Library later.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether he will publish tables to show, for each Child Support Agency office, (a) performance in relation to overall clearance targets, (b) the total number of cases outstanding, (c) the number of people who have requested that their assessments be reviewed due to change of circumstances, (d) the number of cases still outstanding and how many of those have been outstanding for longer than (i) six months and (ii) 12 months and (e) how many appeals are outstanding, and for how long.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Mark Fisher, dated 29 November 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the performance of the Child Support Agency against overall clearance targets and the number and age of change of circumstances reviews and appeals.

The Agency does not collect all of the information in the format that your require. The information available relates to each Child Support Agency Centre (CSAC) and is shown in the attached tables.

Prior to August 1994 the Agency did not count the number of reviews requested following a change of circumstance. Since August, the Agency has identified the age of all such outstanding reviews and has monitored the issue of review forms.

I hope that this reply is of help.

Special Advisers

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Mr. Hague: This Department employs one special adviser.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable and the salary spine reflects this.

Benefits

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will provide comparable figures both regionally and nationally on the number of employed people claiming (a) housing benefit, (b) council tax benefit and (c) family credit in each year since 1979.

Mr. Roger Evans: The available information is set out in the tables.

Table a. Housing Benefit and Council Tax Benefit for employed people

Notes:
1. For Housing Benefit, comparable figures, including the regional analysis, are not available prior to 1989.
2. Council Tax Benefit was introduced in April 1993. Figures for Community Charge Benefit are not comparable.
3. The figures given are those cases without Income Support who have earnings, which may be part-time or full time.
4. The figures are for benefit units, not individuals. A benefit unit may be a couple or a single person.
5. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand. Therefore the sum of the regions may not equal the total for Great Britain.

Source:
Figures are based on a 5 per cent. sample of awards as at the end of May each year.

Note:
1. Family Credit replaced Family Income Supplement in April 1988.
2. Figures relate to families. A family includes at least one person in employment as an employee or self employed.
3. In April 1992, the qualifying hours for Family Credit were reduced from 24 to 16.
4. The figures are shown by DSS administrative region, as a breakdown by standard statistical region is not available.
5. The figures have been rounded to the nearest thousand. Therefore the sum of the regions may not equal the total for Great Britain.

Income Support

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what are the most recent figures to date, and over the most recently available 12-month period, of those couples who are eligible under the current £15 earnings disregard rule; and, where the claimant has been unemployed for two years or more, (a) how many have declared earnings from part-time employment of less than £15 per week and (b) how many have had their income support payments abated because their earnings from part-time employment have exceeded £15 per week.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information is not available in the form requested. The number of couples who are eligible for the £15 disregard is in the table:

	All cases	No disability premium in payment	Disability premium in payment

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many of those refused benefits under the habitual residence test have appealed against the decision.

Mr. Roger Evans: I am informed by the president of the Independent Tribunal Service, His Honour Judge Bassingthwaigthe, that this information is not collected centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if it is Government policy that all those refused income support under the habitual residence test should also be refused social fund grants, social fund loans and crisis loans regardless of their circumstances.

Mr. Roger Evans: Social fund applicants must be in receipt of income support to be eligible for a community care grant or budgeting loan. Crisis loans are available to applicants who are not in receipt of benefit and may be paid to those who fail the habitual residence test.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many new claims for attendance allowance have been made to each disability benefit centre in each month since April 1992 which have either (a) resulted in an award or (b) been rejected; and, in each case, whether (i) examining medical practitioner evidence was provided, (ii) general practitioner factual reports were provided or (iii) the claim was decided solely on the statement of evidence provided by the claimant;

(2) how many new claims for attendance allowance have been refused, broken down by reason for refusal, in each month since April 1992 at each disability benefit centre and for the country as a whole.

Mr. Hague: The administration of attendance allowance is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member shortly.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Paul Flynn, dated 29 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question asking for information about Attendance Allowance (AA) claims at each Disability Benefit Centre (DBC).

I apologise for the delay in providing you with this information.

Information in respect of reasons for refusal of AA claims is not available. However, the information that is available has been enclosed and a copy has been placed in the Library.

It should be noted that the figures given may not accurately reflect new claims received within each month at each DBC because relevant statistics are compiled at the date a claim is cleared rather than the date it is received.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Social Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the annual administrative cost of the social fund; and how many complaints there have been from customers and their representatives in each region in relation to their applications in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration cost of the social fund in 1992–93, the most recent year for which figures are available, was £208 million. This amount includes expenditure on information technology development and capital costs of £17 million, including the investment costs of introducing the improved social fund computer system.

Information concerning complaints about the social fund is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. An applicant for a discretionary payment who is dissatisfied with the decision has the right to have the application reconsidered by applying for a review. Information on the review process and details of the number of social fund review applications are given in the Secretary of State's annual report on the social fund for 1993–94. A copy for the report is in the Library.

Widow's Benefit

Mr. Frank Field: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) widows and (b) war widows ceased to claim widow's benefit on re-marriage in each of the last five years.

Mr. Arbuthnot: For (a) information for the period 1 April 1989 to 31 September 1992 is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Provisional figures for the period since then are as follows:

1 October 1992 to 31 March 1993 = 990
1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 = 2,050
1 April 1994 to 30 September 1994 = 1,060

Information on the number of widows who ceased on re-marriage to claim war widows pension is as follows:

1990—60
1991—48
1992—32
1993—34
1994—41[1]

[1] January to October 1994 inclusive.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund applications which have been turned down went to appeal in each region in each year since the establishment of the fund; and how many appeals were successful.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information requested, which is for the regulated social fund system, is set out in the table below. A comprehensive and independent review system is available for those customers who are dissatisfied with a decision arising out of applications to the discretionary social fund.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: Department of Social Security press releases issued electronically through the Central Office of Information are already accessible to users of the Internet. CCTA[1]'s Government information service, launched last week, will help Departments make information more widely available and the Department is considering how to make best use of this new service to expand the range of information provided electronically.

Note[1]: CCTA, now the Government Centre for Information Systems, is part of the Office of Public Service and Science.

Child Benefit

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current take up rate for child benefit; what is the annual administrative cost for child benefit; and how many complaints there have been from customers in each region over the past year in relation to their application.

Mr. Roger Evans: Child benefit take-up is estimated to be nearly 100 per cent. The administrative cost for Child Benefit in 1992–93—the latest available—was £136.4 million. Information is not readily available to identify customer complaints by region and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Incapacity Benefit

Mr. Garrett: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he proposes to issue the incapacity benefit rules.

Mr. Hague: Regulations setting out the detailed provisions of incapacity benefit were laid before Parliament on 24 November 1994. Notes on these regulations are due to be placed in the Library on 1 December 1994.

Invalidity Benefit

Dr. Godman: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security when he expects the European Court of Justice to deal with the referral concerning the payment of invalidity benefit to women aged 60 to 65 years in the test case of Mrs. Graham; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hague: A ruling by the European Court of Justice is not expected before July 1995 at the earliest.

Invalid Care Allowance

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what percentage of national average earnings invalid care allowance has been in each year since the benefit was introduced.

Mr. Hague: Invalid care allowance was never intended to be a wage for carers; some carers may also be in employment and benefit from the earnings limit.

The information requested is in the table.

Uprating Date	ICA Standard Rate (£)	Average gross weekly earnings (£)	ICA as percentage of average earnings

April 1994	34.50	326.46	10.6

Notes:
Average weekly earnings are those for all full-time adults employees.
The table relates to standard rate ICA only. Information about dependency increases is not included.

Mr. Burden: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what basis and what calculations are used to determine the level of (a) invalid care allowance and (b) carer premium.

Mr. Hague: The answers are as follows:

(a) The standard rate of invalid care allowance is based on 60 per cent. of the standard retirement pension, and is uprated annually.

(b) A carer premium of £10 a week was introduced in 1990 to provide some additional help in income support, housing benefit and council tax benefit, for carers. This too has been uprated annually.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Hague: The Department of Social Security holds approximately 200 top secret or secret files out of a total of approximately 500,000 files.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the current proportion of local authority and housing association tenants who receive housing benefit.

Mr. Roger Evans: The proportions of local authority and housing association tenants who were receiving housing benefit at the end of 1993 were 65 per cent. and 53 per cent. respectively.

Data Sources:
The housing benefit management information systems quarterly caseload count at the end of November 1993.

Mr. Coe: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he intends to make changes to ensure that rent officers have sole jurisdiction for determining market rents for housing benefit purposes in the de-regulated private rented sector; and what implications this will have for rent assessment committees.

Mr. Roger Evans: We intend, as soon as practicable, to amend regulations so that decisions by rent assessment committees will no longer bind local authorities when dealing with housing benefit claims. The only determinations to which local authorities will have to have regard for housing benefit purposes—for tenants in the de-regulated private rented sector—will be those made by the rent officer service. The proposed change would not remove existing rights to seek a determination from rent assessment committees on contractual rent levels. We will consult with the local authority associations in the normal way.

TREASURY

Construction Industry

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what measures will be included in the 1995 Finance Bill to take forward the proposed changes to the construction industry tax deduction scheme.

Sir George Young: The 1995 Finance Bill will contain legislation providing for changes to the construction industry tax deduction scheme in accordance with the Government's announcement on 10 February 1994, Official Report, column 382.

Life Assurance

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the taxation of unit-linked life insurance policies in the light of the High Court judgement in the case of Fuji v Aetna.

Sir George Young: My hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Corporate Affairs has today made a statement about the regulatory implications of this judgment.

The uncertainty of the judgment has created about the tax position is also of concern to the Government, because of the volume of policyholders' money invested in policies which may be affected. In our view it is clearly in the interests of those policyholders that uncertainty should, so far as possible, be removed. It is also right that the tax treatment of policies already sold should follow the common understanding, at the time of their sale, that they were indeed insurance contracts. This understanding was shared by the insurers, their policyholders, and the Inland Revenue. We shall, if necessary, propose legislation to this effect.

We shall not be able to decide on the details of the legislation that may be required until the outcome of the appeal is known, but our broad intention would be to provide that where a contract which was not, as a matter of law, a contract of insurance has been entered into by a life insurance company of a friendly society on the basis that it was a contract of life insurance, with the consequence that it formed part of the long-term business of the insurer, then the contract would be treated, for all tax purposes, as though it were a contract of life insurance. We would propose to introduce provisions having analogous effect in relation to the reinsurance of such policies, and in relation to policies written outside the United Kingdom. We shall also consider, in the light of the final decision in the case, whether it is appropriate to propose similar legislation in relation to capital redemption contracts.

The proposed legislation would apply to policies written at any time in the past, in relation to both past and future direct tax liabilities, except that tax liabilities which have already become final on a different basis will not be disturbed. In addition, where an assessment to income tax or capital gains tax that relates to a particular contract has been made on a taxpayer on the basis that the contract was not one of insurance, and become final, the proposed legislation will not apply to any other assessment to either of those taxes made on the same taxpayer, or on their personal representatives, in relation to the same contract. I should also emphasise that the effect of the legislation would simply be to re-characterise the contracts in question as contracts of life insurance, and would not otherwise affect their status for tax purposes. In general, the proposed legislation would not affect contracts to be written in the future, but we will consider the matter in the light of the final judgement in the Fuji case.

Inland Revenue Powers

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government intends to publish the report of the independent inquiry by Mr. Philip Ely into the powers of the Board of Inland Revenue to call for the papers of tax accountants; and how the Government intend to proceed on the matter.

Sir George Young: I have asked the Inland Revenue to arrange for early publication of Mr. Ely's report, and to consult with the main representative bodies to seek the best way of implementing the report's recommendations with a view to further legislation.

Unemployment Costs

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his latest estimate of the cost of a registered unemployed person to the Exchequer in lost taxes and in unemployment related benefits.

Mr. Aitken: Information on the total cost of unemployment related benefits for Great Britain is given by the Department of Social Security in its annual report. In 1993–94 this is estimated to amount to £9,720 million. The average level of unemployment in 1993–94 was 2,750,000. The implied cost of an unemployed person is £3,535.

Estimates of tax revenues forgone involve estimating the indirect and direct taxes unemployed people would pay in employment. Any attempt to estimate these figures would depend on a large number of assumptions. Such assumptions are inevitably arbitrary and any estimate of the cost of lost taxes is subject to a high degree of uncertainty.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the total cost to the Exchequer since 1979 to date of (a) lost taxes and (b) unemployment related benefits due to the levels of registered unemployment.

Mr. Aitken: The amount of lost taxes as a result of unemployment cannot be estimated reliably. Estimating the indirect and direct taxes an unemployed person would pay in employment depends on a large number of assumptions. Such assumptions are inevitably arbitrary.

Information on the total cost of unemployment related benefits for Great Britain is given by the Department of Social Security in its annual report. Information for the years since 1978–79 is as follows:

Year	Total £ million
1978–79	1,321
1979–80	1,409
1980–81	2,387
1981–82	3,666
1982–83	4,552
1983–84	5,671
1984–85	6,290
1985–86	6,936
1986–87	7,134
1987–88	6,381
1988–89	5,240
1989–90	4,310
1990–91	5,070
1991–92	7,530
1992–93	9,110
1993–94	9,720

The figures are in cash terms, unadjusted for inflation.

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he can provide an estimate of net savings to the Exchequer if there was a one million reduction in the unemployment total.

Mr. Aitken: The Department of Social Security estimates that a 100,000 fall in unemployment in 1994–95 would reduce expenditure on unemployment-related benefits by £365 million. The implied savings for a 1 million fall in the unemployment total is £3,650 million.

Tax Fraud

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the expenditure and return on tax fraud investigations in the financial year 1993–94.

Sir George Young: Inland Revenue investigations into possible or actual tax fraud cost £137 million, with a potential return of £1,310 million.

Royal Household (Audit)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what plans he has to ensure that all the accounts of the royal household funded from the public purse are audited by the National Audit Office.

Sir George Young: All public money administered by the royal household are fully and professionally audited. The majority relates to the Department of National Heritage grant-in-aid for property services in the English occupied royal palaces, which is audited by the National Audit Office. The remainder is civil list expenditure, which is audited by the Treasury under the Civil List Audit Act 1816. The Government have no plans to change these arrangements.

Civil Servants

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is (a) the annual salary and (b) the cost to public funds of benefits in kind of (i) the head of the home civil service, (ii) the secretary to the Cabinet, (iii) the head of the foreign civil service and (iv) permanent secretaries and deputy secretaries in each department of Government.

Sir George Young: The annual salary of the head of the Home Civil Service, who is also Secretary of the Cabinet, is £118,179 with effect from 1 April 1994. The annual salary of the head of the diplomatic service with effect from 1 April 1994 is £110,563.

Annual salaries for permanent secretaries, now grade 1 or grade 1A, and Deputy Secretaries, now grade 2, are listed in the table and are with effect from 1 April 1994.

Central records of the cost of non-cash benefits for these staff are not maintained. Information on the entitlement to such benefits is contained in the civil service management code, a copy of which is in the Library.

Privatisation

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list each company privatised since 1979 with the total share issue in each case.

Sir George Young: It is not practical to list all companies that have been privatised as many were subsidiaries of nationalised industries and were sold by the parent body, not the Government; consequently, information is not held centrally for all such sales. The table shows the companies privatised by Government and the major subsidiaries sold by their parent body. For each, the equity proceeds accruing are also given.

Taxes and Incomes

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the average impact on households in 1995–96 of (a) direct and indirect tax measures announced in the Budget and (b) all tax-related measures taking effect between 29 November 1994 and November 1995; and what has been the rise in real household disposable income per head since 1979.

Sir George Young: Real household disposable income per head has risen by nearly 50 per cent. since 1979. The impact on households of tax-related measures taking effect over the next year is shown in the table. After taking account of tax and inflation, real personal disposable income is forecast to rise by 1½ per cent. in 1995.

(2) Estimates are taken from an analysis of the 1990–92 Family Expenditure Surveys uprated to 1995–96 earnings and price levels.

Civil Servants

Mr. Matthew Banks: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the number of staff in post in central Government Departments at 1 October 1994.

Mr. Aitken: On 1 October 1994 there were 523,981 permanent staff in post in central Government, the lowest for 55 years. This is a decrease of 9,370 during the last six months and more than 40,000 since April 1992.

An analysis showing staff in post by Department has been placed in the Library.

Inheritance Tax Exemptions

Mr. Tipping : To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the countryside sites where public access has been granted by the landowner in return for exemption from inheritance tax, the amount of inheritance tax forgone in return for granting this access for each year for the past 10 years, the number of sites involved for that year for the past 10 years, and the steps that have been taken to publicise the access to these sites.

Sir George Young [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The normal rules of taxpayers confidentiality prevent me from giving details of individual cases where conditional exemption from inheritance tax has been granted.

The annual average cost of conditions exemption from inheritance tax, or its predecessor capital transfer tax, for land and buildings is estimated to have been between £5 million and £10 million over the period 1984–85 to 1993–94.

There have been 133 designations of land for additional exemption from inheritance tax or capital transfer tax in England. Figures for designations of land on a year by year basis are not available at acceptable cost.

The owner of land which is conditionally exempt from inheritance tax is required to publicise the agreed public access arrangements. The heritage advisory agencies will discuss with each owner the appropriate level of publicity. Each case is considered individually and all relevant factors, including the existing level of publicity, are taken into account. Although the extent of public access may already be widely known, for example where substantial public access is already given, the owner will generally be required to take specific steps to publicise the public access arrangements, for example by advertising the access arrangements in a local tourist office or town hall. For new designations of scenic land in England, owners are required to display at all points of entry onto their land map boards showing the agreed public access.

TRANSPORT

Highways Agency

Mr. Gareth Wardell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the adequacy of the arrangements made for the composition of the Highways Agency.

Mr. Watts: I consider that the arrangements are working well.

Yugoslav Airlines

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the restrictions currently preventing Yugoslav Airlines from flying into London Heathrow airport; what action is being taken to allow such flights; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: Following the suspension of certain sanctions imposed in the Security Council of the United Nations, which permits passenger services to operate to and from Belgrade for an initial period, JAT Yugoslav Airlines has applied to my Department for permission to fly to Heathrow. The United Kingdom normally expects countries whose airlines fly here to be signatories to the Chicago convention on international civil aviation, which binds airlines to minimum safety standards in respect of maintenance of aircraft and flight operations and their oversight by the state's regulatory authorities. The federal republic of Yugoslavia is not a signatory to the convention, and we are discussing with it how we can be assured that international safety standards are being met before we permit JAT to operate to London.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory procedure was used for constructing the M11 link road.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 30 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Transport has asked me to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road since its construction is now an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

The statutory procedures followed were contained in the Highways Act 1980 and Acquisition of Land Act 1981.

Trains (Black Boxes)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list by British Rail region the percentage of train stock currently fitted with a black box; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The information is not available in the form requested. Data recorders are fitted as standard to all new locomotives and electric or diesel multiple passenger units, and to those already in service that are expected to have a long residual life. There are currently 610 locomotives or multiple units fitted with data recorders. This figure includes passenger and freight locomotives and multiple units comprising two, three and four car units.

Rail Services

Mr Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list for each British Rail region since 1 August the number of services that have been affected by low ground adhesion; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: This information is reported by Railtrack only if a notifiable accident results from low adhesion. The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is investigating two such cases.

Station Safety

Mr. Austin-Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many stations within the Network SouthEast operating region are unstaffed after 6 pm and at weekends; and if he will provide comparable figures for 1979.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 25 November 1994]: The information requested is not available in the form requested. A comparison with 1979 would in any event not be possible as Network SouthEast was not created until 1986.

However, I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my right hon. Friend the Member for Kettering (Mr. Freeman) on 14 March 1994, Official Report, column 508. The figures in that reply are still current.

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many permanently unmanned train stations there were throughout the United Kingdom in each year since 1991.

Mr. Watts: Of about 2,500 stations on the Railtrack network, some 1,000 or 40 per cent. are currently permanently unmanned. Since the number of unmanned station varies throughout the year, no definitive figures can be given for any previous year, but the overall number has been of the same order since 1991.

Rural Communities

Sir David Steel: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what assessment he has made of the relationship between a petrol price increase and the opportunities for mobility in rural communities.

Mr. Norris: Higher fuel prices play an important part in meeting the threat of global warming by encouraging people to reduce their fuel consumption in a variety of ways. One is by purchasing smaller, more fuel—efficient cars and another is by driving less through making shorter or less frequent journeys or switching to other less polluting modes of transport. A further way is by adopting a sensible driving technique and keeping vehicles properly tuned and maintained.

There is less scope for switching to other modes, which is more likely in rural areas, but we would expect individuals to place more emphasis on the fuel efficiency of their vehicles. Statistics reveal that rural motorists currently achieve fewer miles per gallon than their urban counterparts. This flexibility of response illustrates the benefits of fuel price increases over other mechanisms for reducing fuel use, such as vehicle regulation.

Cycling, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is his estimate of the number of daily cycle journeys in London for each year since 1983; what plans he has for increasing cycle routes in London; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norris: The estimated number of daily cycle journeys by Londoners is shown in the table for the years for which data are available:

1989: 290,000
1990: 240,000
1991: 240,000
1992: 240,000
1993: 220,000

The Department is currently considering a co-ordinated did from all 33 London local authorities for funds to implement the London cycle network. A decision on this will be announced shortly.

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what funding has been given during the last 12 months to London councils to encourage cycling; and if he will list the funding to each London council.

Mr. Norris: Capital support has been available to assist London local authorities' general transport projects, including safety schemes. For 1995–96, a London cycle network "package" bid has been received on behalf of all 33 authorities. A decision on this will be announced shortly.

Meldon Quarry

Mr. Gunnell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what income was received from the sale by British Rail of Meldon quarry, Somerset; and what percentage of receipts from privatisation since the passage of the Railway Act 1993 this represents.

Mr. Watts: The receipts from the sale by British Rail of Meldon quarry and other sales are the subject of confidentiality undertakings between British Rail and its bidders.

Choice

Mr. David Evans: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if it is his policy that people should be able to exercise a choice in their means of transport wherever practicable.

Mr. Norris: Yes.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what are the responsibilities of his Department in following up the crash of the Pan Am 103 at Lockerbie.

Mr. Norris: My Department deals with the United Kingdom national aviation security programme. Our responsibilities following the disaster have included thoroughly reviewing the programme and making substantial improvements to it in the light of what happened on 21 December 1988.

My Department also had responsibility through the air accidents investigation branch for conducting the technical investigation into the circumstances of the disaster.

Aircraft Noise

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement about aircraft noise; and what proposal he has in relation to noise at small airports;

(2) when he proposes to implement the recommendations of the review of air noise legislation contained in his latest report;

(3) what interim proposals he has to deal with aircraft noise;

(4) what assessment he has made of the local weakness in present planning legislation used by local authorities to deal with aircraft noise.

Mr. Norris: Airports can bring substantial economic and social benefits to their surrounding areas, but aircraft noise can also cause annoyance. It is important therefore, that aerodrome and aircraft operators minimise the disturbance to local communities caused by their operations, so far as is practicable and reasonable. All larger aerodromes and many smaller ones already take measures to reduce noise disturbance.

Aerodromes are also subject to planning legislation in the usual way, and it is for the local planning authority to assess all the relevant factors when considering planning applications. It is possible to exercise a measure of control over aircraft noise by way of conditions attached to planning permissions. Because aerodromes vary greatly in size, types of operation, and in their local circumstances, measure to minimise noise nuisance are best developed and monitored locally.

In March last year, following extensive consultation, the Government published their conclusions on new measures to control aircraft noise. The Government announced their intention—Official Report, 25 March 1993, column 706–7—to introduce new legislation to give aerodromes powers to prepare and enforce noise amelioration schemes. These arrangements would build on the existing, mainly voluntary system of control. The Government will introduce the new legislation at a suitable parliamentary opportunity. There are no plans to introduce interim measures, but consideration is being given to producing national guidance on mitigating aircraft noise.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he proposes to introduce restrictions on aircraft engine noise requirements on airports.

Mr. Norris: Under existing legislation, all civil jet aircraft operating into all United Kingdom airports must carry a noise certificate demonstrating compliance with standards agreed by the International Civil Aviation Organisation. Civil propeller-driven aircraft certificated after 6 October 1977 are also required to comply with such standards. These standards are included in The Air Navigation (Noise Certification) Order 1990.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what requests he has had from (a) airport authorities and (b) members of the public for noise mitigation schemes.

Mr. Norris: The information requested can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he plans to introduce legislation to outlaw old aircraft.

Mr. Norris: The Government have no plans to prevent aircraft from flying purely on the grounds of their age. The United Kingdom has, however, implemented directive 92/14/EEC, which requires older, noisier jets, the so called "chapter 2" types, to be phased out between 1995 and 2002. This legislation builds on earlier action to ban non-noise certificated jets and to prevent the addition of chapter 2 types to the United Kingdom register.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Norris: The information is as follows:

(a) 25

(b) 12,000.

Traffic Priority Route, London

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects the next traffic priority route to be introduced in London.

Mr. Norris: Early in the new year.

London Underground

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what action he has taken to improve services and usage of the Barking to Gospel Oak line.

Mr. Watts: The provision of services on the Barking to Gospel Oak line is a matter for North London Railways, one of British Rail's train operating units.

NORTHERN IRELAND

NHS Trusts

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many general and senior managers were employed by NHS trusts in each year since 1991–2, by region.

Mr. Moss: In Northern Ireland, trusts became operational from 1 April 1993. The information is as follows:

From 1 April 1993 (figures are at September 1993)

Trust	General manager/chief executives	Senior managers
Royal Group of Hospitals and Dental Hospital HSS Trust	1.00	27.00

Roads

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the annual roads service budget for minor works in each of (a) Fermanagh, (b) Dungannon, (c) Omagh, (d) Strabane district council areas and (e) Derry city council area.

Mr. Moss: In 1994–95 the estimated minor works expenditure for the district council areas in question is as follows:

District council area	Expenditure in £000s
Derry	587
Dungannon	333
Fermanagh	555
Omagh	521
Strabane	415

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the current major road works schemes being undertaken in the Fermanagh, Dungannon, Omagh and Strabane council areas; and what is their total value

Mr. Moss: Work is currently being undertaken on Omagh through-pass stage 2A and over a period 1994 to 1999 it is planned to undertake major road schemes at Anne street/Thomas street, Dungannon, on the A29 at Carland bridge, on the A5 at Burndennett, Leckpatrick, Magheramason and Garvaghy and on the next stage of the Omagh through-pass. The total estimated cost of these schemes is approximately £9.4 million.

Technical Training Centres

Rev. Martin Smyth: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what factors led to the decision to close the Boucher Road technical training centre in south Belfast and to build a new centre two miles away at Springvale;

(2) if he will list the number of students attending courses at each of the technical training centres in the Greater Belfast area in each of the past three years;

(3) if he will list the locations, student capacity and catchment area of technical training centres in the Greater Belfast area;

(4) what plans he has made to provide technical training for students from south Belfast once the Boucher Road training centre is closed;

(5) what will be the cost of the construction of the new technical training centre at Springvale in west Belfast; and what are the projected annual running cost;

(6) what are the annual running costs of Boucher Road technical centre in south Belfast.

Mr. Ancram: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Training and Employment Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Julien Crozier. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from J.S. Crozier to Rev. Martin Smyth dated 28 November 1994:

You have asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland six questions, all of which are concerned with the planned closure of Boucher Road Training Centre in 1996 and the provision of a new facility at Springvale.

The Secretary of State has asked me as Chief Executive of the Training and Employment Agency, which has responsibility for these matters, to reply. I will deal ;with all of your questions under a number of main headings.

Bouchewr Road

The decision to close Boucher Road was taken in the light of cost, existing capacity and demand, principally the latter. Boucher Road has a target capacity of 240 and currently has 185 trainees, of whom 80 per cent. come from Catholic West Belfast, and some 2 per cent. from South Belfast.

There are already sufficient YTP and adult training places in the catchment area of Boucher Road. The continuation of that centre, together with the arrival of a new Springvale facility, would result in considerable over provision in the West Belfast area.

The total running cost of Boucher Road for the last financial year was £1.25 million for a capacity of 240 places.

Training Centres in Greater Belfast

Details of Training Centre provision in the greater Belfast area are in the attached annex.

South Belfast

Given the low numbers involved there is ample provision in the other Belfast and Lisburn Training Centre for anyone from South Belfast who does not wish to travel to Springvale. However, if at any time in the future we were experiencing significantly increased demand from that area, we would consider how best to meet that demand.

Springvale Training

In 1990 a review of the organisation of training in the Springfield/Lower Falls area of Belfast was carried out by consultants. The main recommendation was that a new training organisation should be established in the area which would embrace both adults and young people, promote complementarity and avoid duplication. In order to develop such a capacity in the heart of that area and to provide a community focus in the re-development of the old Mackies' site at Springfield Road the Agency, along with Making Belfast Work is to provide a new hitech skills training facility.

Springvale, which will be a private non-profit making company, plans to provide enhanced opportunities for individuals from the area to develop their skills in the manufacturing and engineering industries. This in turn is aimed at attracting inward investment to that area.

The project is being funded through the Making Belfast Work Initiative and will cost in total some £4.5 million. Estimated annual running costs for the first 3 years fall within the following ranges for a planned capacity of 350 places:

Year 1: £841,000–£ 917,000
Year 2: £1,029,000–£1,133,000
Year 3: £1,136,000–£1,287,000

I hope that you will find this information helpful.

Commissioner for the Holding Centres

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will provide (a) the annual remuneration paid to the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres in Northern Ireland and that of the Staff under his supervision, (b) the total annual cost to the public purse of the office of the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres in Northern Ireland and (c) a list of any meetings, conferences or functions outside of the United Kingdom which the commissioner has attended in his official capacity since taking up office.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is as follows:

*(a)*The annual remuneration paid to the Independent Commissioner for the Holding Centres in Northern Ireland is £30,000; that for his Deputy is £10,000. The support staff comprise two civil servants on secondment who also serve the independent assessor of military complaints procedures from the same office premises. The portion of annual remuneration specific to their support work for the independent commissioner totals £24,000.

*(b)*The total annual cost to the public purse of the office of the Commissioner in Northern Ireland is £107,000.

*(c)*Since his appointment in December 1992, the independent commissioner has, to date, made three visits in that capacity outside the United Kingdom.

Health Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the number of health authorities and trusts as at 30 September.

Mr. Moss: As at 30 September 1994 there were four health and social services boards and 13 health and social services trusts in Northern Ireland.

Council for Voluntary Action

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the nature and scope of the work carried out by Phelim Hamill, during his employment with the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Moss: I understand that Mr. Hamill was an information officer with the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland to what security or other socially sensitive information Phelim Hamill had access during his period of employment with the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action; and if he intends to carry out an inquiry.

Mr. Moss: None.

Mr. Maginnis: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the present chairman of Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action was in office during the period when Phelim Hamill was employed; and what other public appointments the NICVA chairman holds in Northern Ireland or within any other jurisdiction.

Mr. Moss: No. The present chairman is a non-executive director of the Craigavon and Banbridge health and social services trust.

Mr. Maginnis : To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the role of the Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action; and what are the sources and amount of its funding.

Mr. Moss: The Northern Ireland Council for Voluntary Action is a leading voluntary organisation in Northern Ireland which provides support and training for other voluntary organisations, and which also represents and articulates the views of the wider voluntary sector on matters of common concern. Full details of income are contained in the annual accounts for 1993–94, which are available from the council.

Disability Living Allowance

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what is the average period of time taken to process an appeal in respect of an application for disability living allowance;

(2) what is the average period of time taken to process an application for disability living allowance;

(3) how many appeals have been lodged in respect of disability living allowance claims; and, of these, how many are (a) successful, (b) unsuccessful and (c) outstanding.

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for replies to be given.

Letters from Alec Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 25 November 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the average period of time taken to process an appeal in respect of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) applications.

The average number of days taken to process an appeal from the date of receipt of the letter of appeal until the date the case is sent to the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) is 86 days for the period April 1994 to October 1994. Additional staff have been deployed and overtime is being worked to improve the clearance time. The arrangements for hearing appeals is the responsibility of the President of the ITS and I have passed a copy of your question to him.

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the average period of time taken to process an application for Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

Information on the processing of DLA claims is not available in the "average period" format that you have requested but is available in terms of the percentage of claims cleared within time limits set by the Minister. For the 1994–95 year these time limits/targets are 68 per cent. to be cleared in 30 days and 85 per cent. to be cleared in 53 days.

For the period April 1994 to October 1994, 55 per cent. of claims were cleared within 30 days and 82 per cent. within 53 days. Performance over the last few months has shown a marked improvement as a result of measures taken earlier in the year to deal with some identified problems and in October, 74 per cent. of claims were being cleared within 30 days and 92 per cent. within 53 days.

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary question about the number and outcome of appeals lodged in respect of Disability Living Allowance (DLA).

Since the introduction of DLA in April 1992 to the end of October 1994 there have been 2321 review decisions appealed. Of these, 601 have been successful and 857 have been unsuccessful. There were 608 appeals awaiting preparation of submissions to the Independent Tribunal Service (ITS) and around 250 are with the ITS for hearings to be arranged.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans there are to review the operation of the disability living allowance scheme.

Mr. Moss: There are no immediate plans to review policy on the disability living allowance scheme.

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for disability living allowance were received in each month since the introduction of this benefit; and if he will give, for each month, details of applications that are (a) approved, (b) refused, (c) withdrawn and (d) outstanding.

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alex Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 28 November 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about the numbers and outcome of Disability Living Allowance (DLA) applications received since its introduction.

I am sorry that data for the period February 1992 to March 1993 is not readily available in the form you requested. Work has started on extracting the data and I will write to you when this becomes available. I can however supply you with the information for the period April 1993 to October 1994 and this is set out in the table below. I hope you will find this helpful.

Numbers of DLA claims received, allowed, disallowed, withdrawn and outstanding from April 1993 to date.

Month	Received	Allowed	Disallowed	Withdrawn	Outstanding
April 1993	3,187	2,799	1,769	21	5,316

Loans and Grants

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many applications for (a) community care grants, (b) budgeting loans and (c) crisis loans were received by each office of the Social Security Agency in each month since January 1993; and if he will break down the figures for applications which were (i) approved and (ii) refused.

Mr. Moss: Responsibility for the subject in question has been delegated to the Social Security Agency under its chief executive, Mr. Alec Wylie. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given, but as the tabular material is exceptionally lengthy I have arranged for it to be placed in the Library.

Letter from Alec Wylie to Mr. Seamus Mallon, dated 28 November 1994:

I have been asked to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question requesting information about the number of applications for Community Care Grants, Budgeting and Crisis Loans.

I am sorry that information is not held in precisely the format you have requested but I have set out the available data in the attached tables. As the Social Fund has been managed on a District basis from April 1991, it is not possible to provide details for each Social Security Office. I am therefore providing information by District but I have also included an annex to show which Social Security Offices make up each District. I should also explain that the number of awards made is the total of all awards made in each month, including those made as a result of a review, and the refusals information is the number of initial decisions to refuse as a percentage of all decisions made in that particular month. While, therefore, there is no direct correlation between the figures in each column in the table, the information as set out fairly reflects the general position on social fund applications.

Population Statistics

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the current population of each ward in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: The Northern Ireland census 1991 summary report, published in January 1992, contains at table 4, pages 4 to 13, the population of each District Council ward. Copies of this report are available in the House of Commons library.

If, however, the hon. Gentleman is referring to the current electorate of each ward, this information is contained in the 1994 electoral register, copies of which were forwarded to the main political parties in January 1994 by the Chief Electoral Officer for Northern Ireland.

Deprivation

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish the indices of deprivation used by his Department; and if he will list the electoral wards of Northern Ireland in order of the degree of deprivation.

Sir John Wheeler: A general index of relative multiple deprivation was published in September 1994 by the Department of Finance and Personnel in a report entitled "Relative Deprivation in Northern Ireland", policy planning and research unit occasional paper no. 28, a copy of which is in the Library. The report lists the 26 district councils, 566 wards and 3,729 enumeration districts in Northern Ireland ranked in order of their degree of deprivation. Where appropriate, Departments may use this research to target programmes in accordance with their own needs and priorities.

Exchequer Spending

Mr. Mallon: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what was the total Exchequer expenditure voted for Northern Ireland in each of the past five years; and what is the latest estimate of Exchequer spending over the next five years;

(2) if he will take steps to ensure that there is no reduction in the level of Exchequer expenditure, in real terms, in the incoming financial year;

(3) what Exchequer savings are expected to result from the recent end to violence; and what steps will be taken to ensure that such savings are invested in Northern Ireland.

Sir John Wheeler: The total public expenditure in Northern Ireland in the past five years is given in the table below. My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his unified Budget Statement announced the public expenditure totals for Northern Ireland for 1995–96 to 1997–98 and these are also shown. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland will shortly be making a statement on the allocation of those totals to individual programmes within Northern Ireland. Estimates for 1998–99 and 1999–2000 are not available.

1989–90	5,395
1990–91	5,525
1991–92	6,018
1992–93	6,580
1993–94	7,086
1994–95	7,492
1995–96	7,716
1996–97	[1]7,880
1997–98	[1]8,020

[1] Rounded to the nearest £10 million.

The Northern Ireland total is mainly the result of the application of the comparability principle which automatically adjusts the NI total in line with movements in comparable GB programmes in proportion to relative population. Full account has been taken of Northern Ireland's special needs in setting its overall public expenditure total.

The peace process is still at an early stage and it would not be helpful to speculate on the likely quantum of savings. In setting public expenditure totals for Northern Ireland full account will be taken of Northern Ireland's special needs.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Sir John Wheeler: Of the number of files held centrally in the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments, 57 are top secret and 4,661 are secret.

Textile Industry

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has concerning interests of the chairman of the Northern Ireland industrial development board in the textile industry; and what assessment he has made of the objectivity of the consideration given by the board to the application by the Hualon Corporation for a grant of £61 million for new textile facilities in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 November 1994]: All members of the Industrial Development Board are required to register interests which could impinge on their work as Board Members. The chairman has registered interests in two Northern Ireland clothing companies, Cooneen Textiles Ltd. and Regatta Fashions Ltd. My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State has the fullest confidence in the objectivity of the advice given by the board to officials and Ministers on this and all other cases.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps have been undertaken by his Department to examine the propriety of links between the chairman of the Northern Ireland industrial development board and the Hualon Corporation.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 November 1994]: Neither my right hon. and learned Friend nor the chairman of the Industrial Development Board is aware of any links which should be investigated. Mr. McGuckian has met

Hualon on three occasions, supported by officials, in his capacity as chairman, which is the full extent of his contacts with the corporation.

Forum for Peace and Reconciliation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy to oppose the appointment of Mr. John McGuckian to the chairmanship of the Forum for Peace and Reconciliation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The Forum for Peace and Reconciliation is entirely a matter for the Irish Government. The chairman is Judge Catherine McGuinness.

Hualon Corporation

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Hualon Corporation has to date honoured all commitments relating to the payment of monies into its Northern Ireland subsidiary in connection with the projects for which the Northern Ireland Industrial Development Board has approved the payment of a £61 million grant; if he will specify what those commitments were and the date by which they should have been and were honoured; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 21 November 1994]: Hualon Corporation's commitments to its Northern Ireland project are contained in the agreement with the Industrial Development Board, the details of which are commercially confidential.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will identify every occasion upon which members of the Northern Ireland Industrial Development Board (a) met, and (b) received hospitality from individuals associated with the Hualon group.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 21 November 1994]: Over the five-year period during which discussions with Hualon have been conducted, the chairman of the Industrial Development Board, has met with executives of the Hualon Corporation on three occasions. On two of these occasions, during visits to a number of locations in Asia, discussions with Hualon executives in Malaysia extended over dinner provided by the company. On the other occasion, in Northern Ireland, IDB hosted a working dinner.

Tourist Board

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland during what period Lord O'Neill served as chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board; by whom he was appointed; and what were his given reasons for resigning.

Mr. Ancram: Lord O'Neill was appointed chairman of the Northern Ireland tourist board on 1 October 1975 by the Department of Commerce. He served until 30 June 1980, when his term of office expired.

DEFENCE

Canadian Forces Base, Suffield

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many United Kingdom service personnel were (a) killed and (b) injured at the Canadian forces base, Suffield in each year since 1972; what was the cause of death or injury; and whether a board of inquiry was held in each case.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. member.

Mr. Home Robertson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on how many occasions since 1972 the safety procedures of the British Army training unit at the Canadian forces base, Suffield have been reviewed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: All aspects of safety at the British Army training unit, Suffield are kept under constant review. The range safety inspection team conducted a review earlier this year, in keeping with this continuous process. In addition, particular attention is paid to any recommendations for the improvement of safety procedures which may arise from inquiries into specific incidents.

Latham Report

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he is having, and with whom, on the possible effects of the Latham report on his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department is a major customer of the construction industry, and we are keen to pursue any initiatives which may improve the efficiency of the industry and deliver better value for money. Accordingly, my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has agreed with Cabinet colleagues that officials from our Department should participate in both the efficiency scrutiny, which the Prime Minister recently announced, and the follow-up work to the Latham report which is being co-ordinated by the Department of the Environment.

RAF Scampton

Mr. Leigh: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the joint arms control implementation group, the trade management training school and the Rapier carderisation unit will be moved to if RAF Scampton closes; and what will be the cost of these relocations.

Mr. Soames: Details of these moves and the associated costs may be found in the consultative document on the proposed closure of RAF Scampton which was issued on 17 November. A copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Indonesia

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what defence matters were discussed when the Chief and Vice Chief of Defence Staff visited Indonesia last year.

Mr. Soames: Neither the Chief of the Defence Staff nor the Vice Chief of the Defence Staff visited Indonesia in 1993. The Chief of the Defence Staff visited in October 1994 and the Vice Chief of the Defence Staff visited in February 1994. During their visits, they discussed defence and security matters of mutual interest. As is usual, details of their discussions are confidential.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what date he became aware that talks were taking place between the Indonesian armed forces commander and the United Kingdom for Scorpion light tanks.

Mr. Freeman: My Department first became aware of Indonesian interest in Scorpion in about August 1992.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all current military contracts for military equipment, vehicles and weapons to Indonesia, including the number of such items involved and monetary amounts.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Ilford, South (Mr. Gapes) on 28 November 1994, Official Report, column 501.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what training, advice or information have been given to the Indonesian armed forces at any time since 1979.

Mr. Soames: The United Kingdom has provided training, including developmental and technical courses, for Indonesian students. Details of training, including the numbers involved, are not normally disclosed as they are regarded as confidential between Governments. Ministers and officials have met representatives of the Government of Indonesia to discuss defence and security matters of mutual interest.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the cost of repair to the aircraft which crashed on landing on the island of Islay on 29 June; what percentage was met from public funds; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The cost of repairs to BAe 146 ZE700 as with all other similar work is commercially confidential. All costs will be met from the Defence budget.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total cost of the repair work undertaken on Chinook ZA717 following its accident in the Falkland Islands in July 1989; on what date the decision was taken not to complete the repair work; and for what purpose the aircraft is currently being used.

Mr. Soames: The damage to the Chinook ZA717 was such that the aircraft was judged, on 4 August 1989, to be beyond economic repair. Since no repairs were initiated, no repair costs were incurred. The aircraft is used at present for battle damage repair instruction.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list all accidents to Royal Air Force Tornado aircraft in 1994, indicating the damage category in each case; and if he will make a statement on the accident rate in respect of Tornado aircraft in 1994.

Mr. Soames: There have been six accidents involving RAF Tornados in 1994, as follows:

	Date	Damage category
Tornado F3	7 June	Cat 5
Tornado F3	8 July	Cat 5
Tornado GR1	19 July	Cat 5
Tornado GR1A/GR1	1 August	GR1A–Cat 5; GR1–Cat 3
Tornado GR1A	1 September	Cat 5
Tornado GR1A	19 September	Cat 5

We have had an extremely low loss rate over the Tornado's 19 years of service. The 1994 Tornado accident rate will be published in due course in the 1995 edition of United Kingdom Defence statistics along with annual accident rates of other military aircraft.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list those aircraft types in Royal Air Force service which are fitted with an accident data recorder.

Mr. Soames: RAF aircraft fitted with accident data recorders are:

Andover
BAe 146
Harrier GR7
Hawk
Nimrod
Sentry
Tornado GR1
Tornado F3
Tristar
Tucano
VC 10 C1

Defence Export Services Organisation

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the total administrative cost of the Defence Export Services Organisation in 1992–93, 1993–94 and projected for 1994–95, both in full and also net of any offsetting administrative arrangements.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leeds, Central (Mr. Fatchett) on 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 139.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence who will be the new head of the Defence Export Services Organisation; what is the duration of his contract; and what is his annual salary.

Mr. Freeman: Mr. Charles Masefield took up his appointment as Head of Defence Export Services on 1 September 1994. He joined the Ministry of Defence on secondment from British Aerospace for an initial period of three years, following his selection through an open recruitment competition.

Mr. Masefield's salary in this appointment is £140,000 per annum and be can earn an additional non-pensionable bonus, subject to performance, up to a maximum of £21,674.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many staff are employed within the Defence Export Services Organisation; what is the breakdown of their posts; and how many staff are employed in London.

Mr. Freeman: The Defence Export Services Organisation staff allocation for 1994–95 is 708. A total of 414 of these staff are located in London. The breakdown is as follows:

Marketing assistance	137
Military advice	119
Export policy and control	47
Disposal Sales Agency	118
Project management	287
Total	708

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many members of staff of the Defence Export Services Organisation are seconded from industry; and what functions they perform.

Mr. Freeman: Two members of the Defence Export Services Organisation are seconded from industry, one is the head of the organisation, the other is the offset advisor. In addition, the post of international finance adviser is filled by an individual from the private sector on short-term contract with MOD.

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence where the overseas offices of the Defence Export Services Organisations are situated; when each office was established; how many staff are currently employed; and what is the annual running cost of each.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Location	Staff Numbers	Estimated cost 1994–95 £000	Established
Riyadh	2	138	1984
Kuwait	3	102	1988
New Delhi	6	86	1984
Kuala Lumpur	5	197	1986
Seoul	3	110	1988
Canberra	2	88	1989
Jakarta	3	72	1991
Bangkok	3	101	1992
Ankara	2	78	1988

Mr. Simpson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the functions of the RAF air defence advisory team and the British defence advisory team; and if he will indicate in each case their relationship to the Defence Export Services Organisation, when the team was established and its annual budget in each of the last three years.

Mr. Freeman: The RAF air defence advisory team—ADAT—was established in 1983, within the Defence Export Services Organisation, to provide advice and assistance on air defence systems, equipments, operations and training to friendly overseas Governments, British defence attachés and British industry. The British defence advisory team—BDAT—is not separately established. It is usually headed by the ADAT leader, and comes together for short periods to provide overseas Governments with on-site studies into single or multi-service roles.

The annual budget for ADAT in the last three years is: 1992–93 £0.354 million, 1993–94 £0.346 million. The estimate for the present financial year 1994–95 is £0.411 million. BDAT does not have a separate budget.

VSEL

Mr. Gallie: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make it his policy to use his VSEL golden share to ensure that no company wishing to take over the company could accumulate more than 15 per cent. shareholding until its takeover offer became unconditional.

Mr. Freeman: Under the articles of association of VSEL plc, it is for the board of the company to ensure compliance with the present 15 per cent. limitation on individual shareholdings. The relevant provisions of the articles of association cannot be amended without the consent of my right hon. and learned Friend as holder of the special share in VSEL. Amendments to these provisions which would be required in order to permit the acquisition of VSEL by either British Aerospace or GEC have been approved at extraordinary general meetings of VSEL, but have not yet received the consent of the special shareholder. My Department previously confirmed to both British Aerospace and GEC that the special shareholder would give his consent to these amendments if they were approved by VSEL shareholders, subject to the relevant regulatory approvals and his being satisfied that his order rights as special shareholder would continue to be protected.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the crews of the Italian Air Force Tornados involved in a breach of the Hill House riding school avoidance area on 22 July 1993 were from the same unit as those involved in a breach of the same avoidance area on 17 June 1993.

Mr. Soames: No.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the minimum authorised altitude for the flight by two German Navy Tornados which infringed the Midland Gliding Club avoidance area on 16 July 1993; and at what height the aircraft were flying at the time of the breach.

Mr. Soames: The aircraft were authorised to operate down to 1,000ft minimum separation distance. The RAF police concluded that it was impossible to establish the exact height of the aircraft as they passed over Long Mynd, but estimated the aircraft to be flying at approximately 900ft above ground level in the complaint area.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the crews of helicopters undertaking low flying below 100ft are required to carry 1:50,000 scale maps of the route.

Mr. Soames: There is no requirement for military helicopter aircrews to carry 1:50,000 scale maps, although such maps are carried whenever aircrews consider it necessary to do so.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the deployment of two United States F-117A aircraft to RAF Lakenheath from 3 to 21 October; how many sorties were flown by the aircraft in the course of their deployment, and how many of these involved use of the United Kingdom low-flying system; how many weapons were dropped by the aircraft, and at which ranges; and how many of the sorties involved use of the Spadeadam range.

Mr. Soames: Between 3 and 21 October 1994, two United States F-117A aircraft deployed to RAF Lakenheath. On 6 October, one of the two F-117As participated in a static display at Soesterberg air base in the Netherlands as part of an official Royal Netherlands Air Force ceremony. In addition, the two F-117As conducted 19 medium-level familiarisation sorties over the United Kingdom. The F-117As did not carry ordnance during these sorties and they did not use either United Kingdom ranges or the United Kingdom low flying system during their deployment.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the RAF Police investigation of the breach of the Wildfowl and Wetlands Trust avoidance area at Caerlaverock by three Army helicopters on 8 December 1993 established whether any Army helicopters had booked in to low flying area 16 during the period of the incident.

Mr. Soames: The investigation established that Army helicopters were booked into low flying area 16 during the period of the incident; however, the helicopters involved in the breach were not. This was because their crews had not intended to fly at low level; they were forced to do so because of poor weather conditions.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many people complained about the seven breaches of the Lockerbie low flying avoidance area during 1993 listed in his Department's evidence to the Defence Select Committee —HC 314 of Session 1993–94 pp. 35–36; and how many other complaints were received during 1993 about low flying within the Lockerbie avoidance area.

Mr. Soames: Seven individuals made a total of 12 complaints about the seven breaches during 1993. A further seven complaints were received during 1993 alleging low flying within the avoidance area, but on investigation, these were not substantiated.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what requests have been received from foreign Governments since 1990 requesting permission for foreign military aircraft to fly over the United Kingdom at less than 250 feet.

Mr. Soames: One request has been received since 1990 from the US Government. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 15 December 1993, Official Report, column 475.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if the Harriers involved in breaches of the Royal Welsh agricultural show low-flying avoidance area on 19 and 21 July 1993 were flown by pilots from (a) the same squadron and (b) the same station; and what were the findings of the RAF Police investigation in relation to the availability of information on the avoidance at the bases concerned.

Mr. Soames: The aircraft in question were from both different units and bases. The RAF police found that notification of the temporary avoidance had been received at both bases. At one of these, however, a flaw occurred in their system for presenting details of the notification to aircrew. This has since been rectified.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the minimum authorised altitude for low-level sorties by German Air Force Tornados during its exchange visit to the United States 494 Fighter Squadron at RAF Lakenheath during August.

Mr. Soames: One thousand feet minimum separation distance.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the foreign aircraft involved in low-flying avoidance breaches on 17 June 1993, 9, 16 and 22 July 1993, 23 August 1993, 21 September 1993 and 14 December 1993 were operating in company with Royal Air Force aircraft at the time of the breaches.

Mr. Soames: None. RAF aircraft took part in the sortie on 21 September 1993 but were not in company with the foreign aircraft at the time of the breach.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if Royal Air Force Police standing orders governing the conduct of investigations into alleged breaches of low flying regulations require the investigators to interview both members of the air crew in cases where the aircraft involved in the alleged breach is a two-seat type.

Mr. Soames: No.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on progress in investigating the low-level overflight of Hope under Dinmore on 23 February 1993 by a Royal Air Force British Aerospace 146 aircraft, as described in evidence to the Defence Select Committee, HC 314 of Session 1993–94, page 44.

Mr. Soames: No investigation was initiated since there was no evidence to suggest that any breach of flying regulations had occurred.

Subsequent inquiries have confirmed that no military BAe 146 aircraft flew in the vicinity of Hope-under-Dinmore on the day in question.

Murted Air Base

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the deployment of RAF Tornados to Murted air base, Turkey, in April 1994; how many aircraft took part; how many low-level sorties were carried out; and what was the minimum permitted altitude for these sorties.

Mr. Soames: Eight Tornado GR1 aircraft were deployed to Akinci air base, formerly known as Murted Air Base Turkey, from 8 to 21 April 1994, to participate in the NATO exercise Distant Thunder 94.

The Tornado crews flew 92 low-level sorties at 500ft descending to a minimum of 250ft when engaged in target approach runs.

Military Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the minimum separation distances between United Kingdom military separation distances between United Kingdom military aircraft (a) in the same formation and (b) not in the same formation, on the landing approach at military airfields.

Mr. Soames: The minimum separation distances between United Kingdom military aircraft on landing approach at military airfields vary according to aircraft type classification. Guidance for RAF aircrew on minimum separation approaches are set out in various RAF instructions.

School Fees

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what ranks serving in the United Kingdom armed forces are able to claim for school fees for children who are of school age and living within the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: Boarding school allowance is available to all ranks of the armed forces serving in the United Kingdom or overseas providing that they meet the eligibility criteria.

Air Incidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what inquiry was held into the near-miss incident on 19 August between an Icelandair Boeing 737 and two United States Air Force F15 aircraft off the Humberside coast; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Investigation of the air traffic control radar recordings showed that standard separation always existed between the aircraft in question, and that there had been no possibility of them colliding. In accordance with normal procedures, the reporting pilot was informed of this and asked if he still wished to file an airmiss. He subsequently withdrew his airmiss report.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the investigation into a near-miss incident involving a Spanish airliner and two RAF Tornados near Gibraltar on 29 January 1992.

Mr. Soames: Incidents which occur in Spanish airspace are matters for investigation by the Spanish authorities. My Department has not received any report on this occurrence.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report of the inquiry into the RAF Puma wirestrike incident near Kinlochmoidart on 18 May.

Mr. Soames: The incident referred to occurred during a routine troop deployment exercise. The RAF Puma sustained minor damage to the main rotor blades as a result of a wirestrike. Such minor incidents are investigated by a unit inquiry. It is not my Department's practice to place copies of unit inquiries in the Library of the House.

Flight Authorisations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if an RAF officer was responsible for checking and authorising the flight from RAF Leuchars by three Danish Air Force F-16s on 14 December 1993.

Mr. Soames: No. There was no requirement for RAF officers to check or authorise the flight plans. The Royal Danish Air Force aircrews were, however, provided with comprehensive face-to-face briefing on the United Kingdom low flying system, fighter affiliation and training targets.

Rwanda

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on what grounds British troops have now been withdrawn from Rwanda; and in what circumstances, relating to the security or humanitarian situation, they will return.

Mr. Soames: The Government agreed to a request from the United Nations for a contingent of specialist troops to provide support for a three-month period to fill the gap until the arrival of the commercial company contracted by the UN to undertake the logistics role in Rwanda.

In the course of their deployment the United Kingdom contingent made a very substantial contribution to the UN operation. Their task has now been completed and they are being withdrawn, apart from a small number of headquarters staff officers. Forces from several African and other states are now firmly established as part of the UN force.

The UN have not sought a further deployment in Rwanda. We would consider any further requests for assistance against our current commitments elsewhere in the world, in the usual way.

Officer Selection

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to introduce the specification requirement of personal integrity for candidates for army officer selection.

Mr. Soames: A high level of personal integrity is expected from all Army officers. Assessment of an individual candidate's personal integrity is already undertaken as part of the normal process of Army officer selection and is carried out by various means including reference to the candidate's application form, initial interviews, headmasters' and tutor's reports, school and university liaison officer's reports, referees' reports and further interviews at the regular commission board. There are no plans to introduce further specific measures.

Arms Sales

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the current controls on British arms sales by country and type of weaponry.

Mr. Freeman: The current export controls are set out in part III group 1 of the Export of Goods (Control) Order 1994 as amended. These define the equipments requiring an export licence and, where the controls are not of a global application, the countries to which they apply. Each export licence application is assessed on a case-by-case basis taking into account, as appropriate, a range of relevant factors including national security, international obligations and humanitarian concerns.

Conduct after Capture Courses

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are his Department's guidelines with regard to service personnel attending conduct after capture courses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Conduct after capture training is made available to those personnel most vulnerable to capture in time of war or other crises.

Equality

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the report on equality in the Army prepared by his Department's working party in 1977

Mr. Soames: Although no working party report on equality in the Army was prepared in 1977, a working party considering future employment in the Women's Royal Army Corps reported in November 1976 and then again in 1978. It is not my Department's practice, however, to release internal planning documents such as the ones produced on these occasions.

Industrial Tribunals

Mr. Martlew: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how much money has been spent by his Department on legal representation in the industrial tribunal cases regarding the dismissal of pregnant service women.

Mr. Soames: About £1,000,000.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Soames: The information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Telephone Bills (Security Service)

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if his departmental budget includes a contribution for the telephone bills of the Security Service.

Mr. Soames: No.

Study Contracts

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is his policy concerning study contracts offered by his Department for risk-reduction work in defence contracts;

(2) when his Department first introduced the policy of study contracts for risk-reduction work in defence contracts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: My Department's phased approach to procurement projects has been applied since the 1960s and aims at the progressive reduction of risk. This includes the use of risk reduction study contracts where judged necessary. Risk management has been reinforced by the introduction of an initiative in the late 1980s which ensures that the MOD applies explicit risk management techniques to all equipment projects.

Procurement

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what changes there have been in his Department's procurement policy in the past six months.

Mr. Freeman: My Department's procurement policy is continually being refined to ensure that the needs of the armed forces are met at minimum overall cost to the defence budget. In the past six months, procurement policy and practices were reviewed as part of "Front Line First". The outcome was reported in July in my Department's publication on the Defence costs study.

Royal Dockyards

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on the privatisation of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Freeman: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave the hon. Member for Plymouth, Sutton (Mr. Streeter) on 23 November 1994, Official Report, column 146. Privatisation on the right terms remains the Government's preferred option.

HEALTH

Commissioning Agencies

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide a list of health commissioning agencies, the health authorities they cover and when they came into being.

Mr. Malone: The term "health commissioning agency" has no statutory basis. Details of joint working between district and family health services authorities are determined by local circumstance. By the beginning of October 1994, there were 55 appointments of joint chief executive. There were a further seven sets of joint management arrangements, without a joint chief executive. A list of authorities concerned will be placed in the Library. Information has not been collected centrally about when the arrangements came into being.

Lysergic Acid Diethymide

Mr. Purchase: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many patients were involved and to what extent lysergic acid diethymide was tested on national health service psychiatric patients; and what long-term monitoring of its effects has been carried out.

Mr. Bowis: Lysergic acid diethymide is not currently used in the treatment of national health service psychiatric patients and we have no evidence that it has been used in recent years.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many deaths in each of the last three years were attributable to the overuse or abuse of (a) temazepam, (b) zopiclone and (c) all other benzodiazepines.

Mr. Sackville: The table shows the number of deaths in 1990–1992 in which there was a mention of abuse of temazepam, other unspecified benzodiazapines, or zopiclone, with or without other drugs.

	1990	1991	1992
Temazepam	12	18	16
Other Unspecified Benzodiazapines	10	17	17
Zopiclone	—	—	—

In 1991 there were, in addition, two drug deaths recorded with mention of both temazepam, diazepam and morphine which are not included in these figures.

Dental Health (Children)

Mr. Thurnham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action her Department is taking to encourage children to brush their teeth.

Mr. Malone: The Department has published an oral health strategy for England which sets a number of objectives relating to the further reduction in caries in children. Carrying forward dental health education is a matter for health authorities. Copies of the strategy are available in the Library.

The Department has made available £1 million for oral health education for 1994–95. Thirty-six proposals have been approved. A second tranche is currently being considered.

Burnley Healthcare NHS Trust

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much Maggie Aikman received on her resignation as chief executive of Burnley Healthcare NHS Trust.

Mr. Malone: Mrs. Aikman received £135,750 net when her contract with Burnley Health Care National Health Service Trust was terminated on 28 October.

Asthma

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place in the Library the cost per head in each family health services authority based on the figures in her answer of 1 November to the hon. Member for Truro (Mr. Taylor), Official Report, columns 1076–78 for (a) the net ingredient costs of asthma preparations in 1993, (b) the net costs of corticosteroids in each year since 1984 and (c) the other net ingredient costs in each year since 1989; and if she will also express the figures in table 2 for the number of prescription items for exempt children in 1992 and 1993 as items per head in each family health service authority.

Mr. Malone: The available information has been placed in the Library. The data for exempt children by family health services authorities could only be provided at disproportionate cost.

NHS Trusts

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what assistance she is giving to London NHS trusts and district health authorities to help them resolve their debt problems.

Mr. Malone: All national health service bodies are expected to operate within their income. However the two Thames regions are responsible for monitoring the financial performance of health authorities and NHS trusts in London and can provide short-term financial assistance where justified. The London implementation group also provides transitional support to NHS trusts in inner London.

The hon. Member may wish to contact Sir William Staveley, chairman of North Thames region, and Mr. William Wells, chairman of South Thames region for further information.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to control the re-employment in the NHS or by NHS trusts staff dismissed by previous NHS or NHS trust employers.

Mr. Malone: The responsibility for recruitment and selection of staff is a matter for national health service employers. They are expected to follow good recruitment practices which include interviews, appropriate questioning about previous employment and career gaps, and taking up of references.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what limitations are placed on non-executive directors of NHS trusts obtaining top management posts in the same trust.

Mr. Malone: Under Regulation 11(1)(e) of the National Health Service Trusts (Membership and Procedure) Regulations 1990, employees of any health service body are disqualified for appointment as chairman or non-executive director of an NHS trust.

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the figures for debt or surplus for each London NHS trust and district health authority at the end of the last financial year.

Mr. Sackville: Information on relevant health authorities is shown in the table. The information requested for national health service trusts will be available in December and placed in the Library.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the regulations on payments to NHS staff (a) in the case of redundancy (b) in the case of health retirements and (c) for dismissal; and what controls she plans to exercise over the behaviour of NHS trusts in similar circumstances.

Mr. Malone: Redundancy payments for national health service staff employed on national terms and conditions of service are governed by section 45 of the General Whitley Council handbook, copies of which are available in the Library. For staff employed on NHS trust terms and conditions of service redundancy payments are covered by their contractual terms.

Retirement on grounds of ill-health, for staff who are members of the NHS pension scheme, is governed by the NHS (Superannuation) Regulations.

Any payments for dismissal on grounds other than redundancy would be determined by the courts and industrial tribunals.

Guidance on the making of termination settlements to general and senior managers on short-term rolling contracts was given to health authorities in HSG(94)18 and to trusts in TEL(94)3, copies of which are available in the Library.

NHS trusts are free, under the terms of paragraph 16(1)(d) of schedule 2 to the National Health Service and Community Care Act 1990, to employ staff on such terms as they think fit.

Prescription Pricing Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current market-testing programme agreed with the Prescription Pricing Authority; and, for each of the elements of the programme, what is the point in the process so far achieved and the target date for completion.

Mr. Malone: The current market-testing programme for the Prescription Pricing Authority includes prescription processing; management and maintenance of the authority's estate; mainframe computer support; security, portering, catering and central administrative services; and information division processing support. Market testing of the prescription processing service and information division processing, which together employ 1,500 staff, is well advanced. Contracts will be in place by 1 May 1995. Work on remaining elements of the programme will begin shortly, with completion anticipated by 31 March 1996.

Cardiac Services

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is his estimate of the number of people each year in the Waltham Forest area who need (a) pacemakers and (b) cardiac catheterisation; and if she will make funds specifically available for these operations to be carried out at Whipps Cross Hospital.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of Redbridge and Waltham Forest health authority to assess the level of need for cardiac services and to purchase these as appropriate. The hon. Member may wish to contact Miss Delva Patman, chairman of the authority, for details.

Ambulance Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to ensure that community health councils are invited to take up observer status on the board of new providers of ambulance services not normally within their competence; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The Government do not believe that it is necessary to extend the statutory powers of community health councils in this way.

EL(94)4, copies of which are available in the Library, makes it clear that all trusts should agree arrangements for liaison and access with community health councils. This applies equally to ambulance service trusts. Where community health councils are not invited to board meetings, trusts should offer alternative regular liaison opportunities.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to provide information via the Internet; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Use of the Internet as an additional method of disseminating information to the public is under active consideration by the Department in line with the Government's commitment to make more information available to the public and to make innovative use of telecommunications. Officials from the Department and the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys are also working with the Central Statistical Office and other Government Departments to see what use can be made of the Internet to disseminate Government statistics.

Breast Cancer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what comparative studies she has made of survival rates for breast cancer for (a) females and (b) males between the United Kingdom and other developed countries; if she will facilitate the universal use of best practice protocols for the treatment of this condition; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: None. The Chief Medical Officers' of England and Wales consultation document "A Policy Framework for Commissioning Cancer Services" recommends that all patients should have access to a uniformly high quality of care wherever they live to ensure the maximum possible cure rates and best quality of life. Where professional bodies have produced best practice protocols we support their use in the national health service. Copies of the consultation document are available in the Library.

Appointments, Doncaster

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) how many people were (a) considered for appointment as chairman of the Doncaster royal infirmary and Montagn Hospital NHS trust and (b) shortlisted; and who selected (i) the shortlist and (ii) the chairman;

(2) on whose advice she decided not to reappoint Mr. Graham Smith as chairman of Doncaster health authority.

Mr. Malone: Recommendations to Ministers for the chairmanships of health authorities and national health service trusts are made by chairmen of regional health authorities. Ministers are responsible for making the final decision. The then Minister of Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney), appointed Mr. Keith Jones as chairman of Doncaster district health authority. I made the decision to appoint Mr. Raymond Tonkinson as chairman of the Doncaster Royal Infirmary and Montagu Hospital NHS trust. Details of unsuccessful candidates are confidential.

Mrs. Maggie Aikman

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she approved of the pay–off of £250,000 made by the Burnley NHS trust to Mrs. Maggie Aikman.

Mr. Malone: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State is not required to approve severance settlements for trust chief executives.

Prescription Pricing Authority

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will place the Touche Ross report on the Prescription Pricing Authority in the Library.

Mr. Malone: No. As part of the market testing process, a number of reports have been prepared for the Prescription Pricing Authority by Touche Ross and others. Those reports contain information which is commercially sensitive.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health is she will order a public inquiry into the maladministration of Wessex, West Midlands and Trent regional health authorities.

Mr. Malone: No.

Patients Charter

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the current patients' charter standard for waiting for attention on an out-patient visit; and how such waiting time standards are measured.

Mr. Malone: The patients charter national standard requires that a patient be given a specific appointment time and be seen within 30 minutes of that time. Monitoring of this standard is done locally using guidance issued by the Department, copies of which will be placed in the Library. The waiting time to be measured is from the time of the appointment to the time the patient is actually seen for the main consultation.

Hip Replacements

Ms Gordon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hip replacement operations have been carried out in each year from 1983 to 1993 in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Sackville: Information for England for the years 1983 to 1991–92, the latest available, is shown in the table. Data for the year 1987–88 are not available. Figures for Scotland and Wales are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales.

Hip replacements and other arthroplasty operations of the hip

Year	Thousands
1983	36.2
1984	36.9
1985	36.5
1986	41.0
1988–89	46.5
1989–90	50.8
1990–91	50.7
1991–92	55.6

Horizontal Management Course

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what grounds NHS funds were used to support managers attending a three-day course in June 1994 at the Hyde Park Hotel on Horizontal Management; what was the cost; and how many managers attended the course.

Mr. Malone: It is a matter for individual national health service trusts and health authorities to determine their training needs. This information is not therefore available centrally.

Cancer

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many people in the United Kingdom have cancer; what are the projected figures for 2015; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested. It has been estimated, using data from the general household survey, that the prevalence of cancer in the adult population is of the order of 1 per cent. In 1989, latest available figures, there were 190,590 registrations of newly diagnosed cases of cancer in England, excluding non-melanoma skin cancers. Projections for 2015 are not available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Information relating to Wales, Scotland and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Wales and for Scotland and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

NHS Executive

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct the NHS executive to change its purchasing system so that all patients are treated equally according to clinical need by (a) having a separate budget for accident and emergency costs, to ensure that unexpected increases do not have to be absorbed by the district health authority, (b) allocating the cost of more expensive and long-term treatments so that general practitioner fundholders pay an appropriate amount, (c) investigation the merits of bringing all general practitioners into the purchasing system as equal partners with district health authorities and (d) investigating the merits of providing all general practitioners with funds for routine treatments; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The aim of budget setting in the national health service is to give both health authorities and fundholding general practitioners a fair share of NHS resources to meet their patients' needs. In the case of health authorities, this includes funding to secure accident and emergency services for the whole of their local population. EL(94)79 recently announced a significant expansion of fundholding options to enable all GPs to become directly involved in purchasing and managing funds on their patients' behalf.

Copies of EL(94)79, "Developing NHS purchasing and GP fundholding", EL(94)84, "General Practice Fundholding: guidance on setting budgets for 1995–96" and FDL (94)68, "Revenue allocations 1995–96" are available in the Library.

GP Contracts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will consider making changes to general practitioners' contracts so as to ensure that if a parent chooses to deregister their child for health surveillance with their general practitioner, the money is then transferred to the health authority to provide an alternative community service; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: In purchasing community child health surveillance, district health authorities take account of the needs of all children who are not registered for child health surveillance with general practitioners. No transfer of money is required to ensure this.

Patient Advocacy Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) if she will set up a working party to examine and report to the House within the next 12 months on the feasibility of introducing a properly funded and independent advocacy service for all national health service complainants; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will ensure (a) that a full range of appropriate independent advocacy services based on existing local interest groups are available to all national health service patients who require such a service with support from joint finance and (b) that it is a statutory duty of regional and district health authorities to have strategies supporting independent advocacy initiatives and financially support advocacy services; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The Government welcome the initiative of those national health service authorities and trusts which have already set up their own patient advocacy and patient friend schemes to encourage and support patients including those who are not able to represent themselves in pursuing complaints, making suggestions about and seeking NHS services. "Being Heard", copies of which are available in the Library, the report of the Wilson committee on NHS complaints procedures, recognised the importance of providing support to complainants and the role of community health councils in doing so. We are currently considering the responses to the consultation exercise on the report and will make an announcement on our decisions in due course.

Pharmaceutical Regulations

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if her Department will undertake a review of the national health services (Pharmaceutical Services) Regulations 1992 to take account of patients' needs; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The Department continues to keep under review the operation of the pharmaceutical regulations and the need for any change.

Vegetarians

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what surveys her Department has commissioned which indicate that vegetarians tend to be more healthy than meat-eaters; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The Department has not commissioned any surveys specifically of the diet, nutritional status and health of vegetarians. A variety of studies have shown that vegetarians as a group tend to be healthier than non-vegetarians, but the many other differences in their diet and in other aspects of their lifestyle may be just as important as the avoidance of meat.

Redundancies and Early Retirements

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what are the total costs of redundancy and early retirement payments to (a) midwife teachers, (b) nurse teachers and (c) senior midwife managers for each of the last three years including 1994 to date.

Mr. Malone: The information is not available centrally.

Mr. Rod Simms

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make a statement on the circumstances leading up to the dismissal of Mr. Rod Simms, facilities manager, Royal Bethlem hospital trust.

Mr. Sackville : This is a matter for the Royal Bethlem and Maudsley national health service trust. The hon. Member may wish to contact Bernard Williams, chairman of the trust, for details.

Computer Centres

Mrs. Bridget Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is her policy in respect of marketing testing or selling national health service computer centres; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: A number of regional computer centres serving the national health service have been sold off or contracted out for a number of years. Others, which remain in-house, have been reviewing their options in the light of the planned abolition of the parent regional health authorities in 1996. The aim is to secure best long-term value for money for the NHS and to maximise the use of existing management and financial resources on the core statutory function of improved health care. Options, which are for local determination, include;

Closure without replacement

Market testing to identify a new supplier or suppliers

Transfer to another owner within the NHS at manageable risk

Sale by competition to an owner outside the NHS (which might include a bid from a Management buy-out)

Guidelines to assist health authorities and trusts in their consideration of future arrangements for NHS trading agencies generally will be issued shortly.

Trent Regional Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will publish in full the district auditor's report relating to Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Sackville: Trent regional health authority received a report from the district auditor at the public meeting of the authority held on 11 July 1994. This related to the transfer of services to the private sector between 1988 and 1992. Copies of the report are available on request from the RHA.

GP Fundholders

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will amend legislation on general practitioner fundholding to require any savings generated by fundholding practices to be paid to the local district health authority to be used for the development of health care against identified needs within a broad and publicly accountable health strategy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No.

NHS Complaints Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will set up an NHS complaints authority on the lines of the Police Complaints Authority.

Mr. Malone: The report of the Wilson committee on national health service complaints procedures recommended that the Government should consider a number of options put forward for reviewing complaints in the NHS, including a national complaints commission. We are currently considering the responses to the consultation exercise on the report and will make an announcement of our decisions in due course.

Trainee Nurses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many trainee nurses there were (a) in 1988 and (b) in 1992; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The information is shown in the table.

In training population—England. Years ended 31 March 1988 and 31 March 1992.

	1988	1992
Pre-registration	58,901	51,901
Post-registration	6,485	4,049
Total pre and post registration	65,386	55,950

Source:
English National Board for nursing, midwifery and health visiting.

The level of qualified nursing and midwifery staff in post has remained virtually static over this period, thus reducing the overall demand for newly qualified staff.

"Cashing in on Independence"

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what consideration her Department has given to the research report, commissioned by the British Council of Organisations of Disabled People, entitled "Cashing in on Independence".

Mr. Bowis: We have read the report "Cashing in on Independence" with interest.

Disabled People (Cash Payments)

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she now expects direct cash payments by local authorities to disabled people to become legally available; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Health made an announcement about direct payments on 24 November and I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend gave my hon. Friend the Member for Stratford-on-Avon (Mr. Howarth) on 24 November, Official Report, columns 332–33.

Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act

Mr. Alfred Morris: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she is taking to ensure full compliance by local authorities with the legal duties imposed by section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970; and if she will make a statement on cases known to her Department of failure to comply with these duties.

Mr. Bowis: Local authorities are aware of their duties under section 2 of the Chronically Sick and Disabled Persons Act 1970. Most cases of alleged breach of statutory duties are resolved by means of local authority complaints procedures, established for this purpose. The Department, of course, follows up any cases brought to its attention and issues guidance as necessary.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files her Department holds.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health holds approximately 400 top secret or secret files. However, many of these were created several years ago, before the revised protective markings were introduced earlier this year, and are therefore not in active use. Since October 1992, no top secret, and only 13 secret, files have been created.

Exeter Protocol

Mr. Steen: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she hopes to make a decision on the continued operation of the Exeter protocol.

Mr. Sackville: We understand that the Royal Devon and Exeter trust ceased elective ventilation following receipt of legal advice. The Department has recently issued guidance—HSG(94)41—copies of which are available in the Library, setting out the legal position on ventilation of potential organ donors. Where clinicians believe there may be some benefit, however slight, to the patient, ventilation remains lawful.

Camden and Islington Health Authority

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what analysis she has undertaken of the effectiveness of health care in Camden and Islington and the adequacy of the funding of the Camden and Islington health authority.

Mr. Sackville: It is the responsibility of the Camden and Islington health authority to obtain effective health care using available resources. The hon. member may wish to contact Roland Everington, chairman of Camden and Islington health authority, for further information.

Mobile Telephones

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the total budget for mobile telephones in the national health service; and how many are held by (a) medical staff and (b) administrators.

Mr. Sackville: Financial responsibility for mobile telephones rests with individual users or their employers. From a limited expenditure survey of users, as part of a national initiative to minimise expenditure on telecommunications, total expenditure is estimated to be of the order of £24 million per year. Estimates of the number of mobile telephones held by various national health service groups are shown in the table.

Group	Number
Clinical Staff	30,000
Other Hospital Staff	[1]9,500
Ambulance Services	500

[1] Includes a variety of technical, clinical and non-clinical staff; administrators were not identified separately. The NHS Executive have recently negotiated substantial discounts with a number of suppliers. These offer individual user savings of between 8 per cent. and 19 per cent. and should provide an overall reduction in the NHS bill of 10 per cent. by 1997.

Respiratory Infections

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospital admissions there were for each month in 1991, 1992 and 1993 for (a) acute respiratory complaints and (b) bronchitis; and if she will provide a breakdown by (i) United Kingdom nation and region and (ii) local health authority or trust.

Mr. Sackville [holding answer 24 November 1994]: Tables setting out the number of finished consultant episodes for respiratory infections including acute bronchitis and bronchiolitis—ICD 460-466—and acute bronchitis—ICD 466—by month of admission, in England, for each national health service region, will be placed in the Library. Information for individual health authorities and NHS trusts is not available. Information relating to Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland are matters for my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Scotland and for Wales and my right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the turnover of each national health service trust in each year since its inception.

Mr. Sackville: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 11 July, Official Report, column 419. The information requested for 1993–94 will become available in December.

Written Answers to Questions

Thursday 1 December 1994

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department (1) how many bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payments date (a) by up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (d) over six months, respectively.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. The last survey conducted in this Department showed that 89.4 per cent. of bills were paid in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Domestic Violence

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will change the legal aid scheme to provide easier access to alleged victims of domestic violence especially in regard to injunction proceedings.

Mr. John M. Taylor: In urgent cases, an emergency legal aid certificate may be granted over the telephone. Many of those seeking injunctions already benefit from this service. Additionally, solicitors holding franchises are able to grant emergency certificates themselves on the spot.

TRANSPORT

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department of how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Mr. Norris: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Rail Electrification (North London)

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects Railtrack to begin work on enlarging Hampstead tunnel and the electrification of the line between Mitre Bridge junction and Willesden high level junction.

Mr. Watts: The Secretary of State has ihstructed Railtrack to make sure that the necessary infrastructure is completed to allow Eurostar rail services from the regions to begin by the start of 1996. The timing of individual works to achieve this is a matter for Railtrack.

Channel Tunnel Rail Freight

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport when he expects Railtrack to begin and to complete its study into the feasibility of using the North Downs route for channel tunnel rail freight traffic; and if he will be making a statement on the findings of the study.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack reported to us in August 1994 that the North Downs route was not an option for channel tunnel freight trains. The scheme proposed would bring no environmental or operational benefit which might justify grant and the works required to upgrade the route would be very expensive. The proposal is therefore not being pursued.

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what statutory powers presently given to Railtrack and railway operators he intends to pass on to the private companies who purchase these shadow companies.

Mr. Watts: Our general policy is that all statutory powers transferred to Railtrack and railway operators from British Rail under the provisions of the Railways Act 1993, together with the statutory powers conferred by that Act, should be passed on when Railtrack and other railway operators move into the private sector. This will be reviewed in each case prior to disposal.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current legal status of Railtrack and the railway operating companies.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack is a company limited by shares, incorporated under the Companies Act 1985; all the shares are owned by the Government. Six passenger train operating companies have been formed. One of these—Gatwick Express Ltd.—is a wholly owned subsidiary of the board and is operating as a separate entity. The other five have not yet had the relevant parts of the board's undertaking transferred to them.

In addition, five freight and parcel companies have been formed, but the relevant parts of the board's undertaking have not yet been vested in them.

Rail Safety

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration British Rail gave in 1989 to implementing advice received from Mr. John Childs regarding the introduction for single-section track of two-way radios for train drivers and exit signals at either end of the track; if following the crash at Cowden on 15 October he will take urgent steps to implement it; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The comments Mr. Childs expressed will be considered by the inspector in the course of his inquiry into the accident at Cowden on 15 October. The arrangements relating to single lines will be considered carefully in the light of the inspector's report.

London Underground

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what budgetary provision has been made by London Underground Ltd. to maintain the Epping to Ongar section of the Central line over the next three years.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for London Underground Ltd.

Minibus Seat Belts

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the dates of all meetings or correspondence he has had with European officials and representatives in respect of his proposal to introduce regulations for minibus seat belts in advance of European action; and if he will place the minutes of meetings and copies of the correspondence in the Library.

Mr. Norris: The Department has had a number of contacts, both formal and informal, with the European Commission at meetings, in correspondence and by telephone on the proposal to act ahead of the European Union to introduce compulsory fitment of seat belts to all minibuses and coaches used specifically for the transport of children.

School Crossing Patrols

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the national criteria for the provision of school crossing patrols; and what discretion the police or local authorities have over providing patrols

Mr. Norris: The Road Traffic Regulation Act 1984 specifies that school crossing patrols may be provided at "places where children cross roads on their way to or from school, or from one part of a school to another, during periods between the hours of 8.00 am in the morning and 5.30 pm in the afternoon when children are so on their way".

Subject to these requirements, the appropriate authority has discretion over providing patrols.

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the research projects undertaken by the Transport Research Laboratory into school crossing patrols and the criteria for the provision or crossing patrols.

Mr. Norris: The only TRL research project on school crossing patrols was report No. 779, published in 1977. This looked at ways in which school crossing patrol officers instruct children about crossing roads.

Rail Track Defects

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport how many miles of railway track have speed restrictions imposed as a result of track defects or insufficient maintenance.

Mr. Watts: Railtrack does not keep a central record of track mileage bearing temporary speed restrictions.

Bridges and Viaducts

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what is the annual cost of maintaining railway bridges and viaducts in (a) north-west England and (b) England.

Mr. Watts: The cost of maintaining railway bridges and viaducts in Railtrack's north-west zone, which includes north Wales but excludes the west coast main line, is around £5 million a year. The cost for England and Wales is approximately £50 million. Figures excluding Wales are not available.

Motorway Signs

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what criteria are used to justify the addition or the removal of towns and cities from motorway direction signs.

Mr. Watts: The main criteria are traffic importance, the requirement to maintain continuity of signing for long-distance traffic, and the number of destinations that can be read by drivers in the time available. The principles of directional signing are explained in "The Design and Use of Directional Informatory Signs"—Local Transport Note 1/94—published by HMSO.

Trains (Black Boxes)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what the black box revealed in respect of the cause of the train crash on the 2 November on the Thames line service at Slough, Berkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: The Health and Safety Executive's railway inspectorate is still investigating this accident.

The results of the investigation and any recommendations made will be discussed with British Rail and/or Railtrack.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Dr. Mawhinney: The information sought is as follows:

(a) Political advisers to the Secretary of State for Transport:

Miss E. Buchanan; from September 1987 to November 1990.

Mr. P. J. E. Miller; from January 1991 to March 1992.

Mrs. E. F. Laing; from April 1992 to July 1994.

Mr. M. G. E. Simmonds; from October 1994 to date.

(b) Special advisers with expert knowledge in particular fields:

Professor B. J. Hoskins, special adviser on the global environmental aspects of transport policies, from February 1990 to November 1990.

Sir Christopher Foster, special adviser on British rail privatisation, from June 1992 to November 1993.

Sir Idris Pearce, special adviser on British Rail privatisation property issues, from June 1992 to July 1994.

Mr. R. B. Salmon, special adviser on British Rail privatisation, from January 1993 to November 1993.

Mr. J. Swift, special adviser on British Rail privatisation, from January 1993 to November 1993.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable and the salary spine reflects this.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport on what occasions since 1979 civil servants in his Department have been asked to draft speeches of a constituency nature for use in a Minister's own constituency.

Dr. Mawhinney: None. Civil servants may provide briefing of a factual nature for Ministers on matters relating to their own departments. In addition, Ministers in preparing for a constituency speech can draw on material produced by their Department during the normal course of business.

M11 Link Road

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will place in the Library a copy of the Coba 9 framework in respect of the M11 Link Road.

Mr. Norris: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Harry Cohen, dated 1 December 1994:

I have been asked to write to you in response to your Parliamentary Question about COBA 9 frameworks prepared for the A12 Hackney Wick to M11 Link Road since this is an operational matter for the Highways Agency.

I have had drawn to my attention the letter which Mr. Steven Norris MP wrote to you about COBA for this road scheme on the 1 September 1993. As the Minister explained then, the evidence given at the Public Inquiries showed that the cost benefit analysis for this urban scheme, although based on COBA methodology and values, was a complex one-off exercise. The last full assessment was prepared for the 1987 Public Inquiry. It consists of several volumes which are being copied especially to meet your request. I have therefore asked our office in Bedford to send the material direct to you at the House of Commons as soon as it is available.

Air Passenger Duty

Mr. Kenneth Baker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport what estimate he has made of the effect on (a) the number of passengers using the various airports and (b) the revenue raised of increasing the air passenger duty by £5 at Heathrow and Gatwick, and reducing it by £5 at the regional airports and at Stansted; and how much additional revenue would be raised.

Mr. Mawhinney: There are no detailed estimates available, and air passengers duty is not an airport charge. However, work done for the RUCATSE working group suggests that if applied to the whole of 1995 the effect of increasing airport charges by £5 at Heathrow and Gatwick, and reducing it by £5 at the regional airports and Stansted, would be to leave passenger numbers at Heathrow unaltered, slightly reduced at Gatwick and at Stansted, and the regional airports for traffic to increase by some 2.5 per cent. It is not possible easily to assess the revenue effects.

Mr. David Hernandez-Purnell

Mr. Austin Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will make a statement on the contents of his press statement of 29 April 1994, concerning a constituent of the hon. Member for Woolwich on abiding by the statute strictly and his subsequent statement on the options open to his Department;

(2) if he will make a statement on the case of Mr. David Hernandez-Purnell.

Mr. Norris [holding answer 28 November 1994]: These are operational matters for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. John Austin-Walker dated 1 December 1994:

The Minister promised that I would write to you about the matter you raised in your two Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State concerning Mr. David Hernandez-Purnell.

This has proved to be a difficult case but it does appear that we are now very close to reaching an agreement with Mr. and Mrs. Hernandez- Purnell on the level of compensation for the property and its development value. That would leave claims under the heading of disturbance to be agreed, or failing agreement to be referred to the Lands Tribunal. The Treasury Solicitor has now written to Mr. Hernandez-Purnell on our behalf offering to settle at a price Mr. Hernandez-Purnell has already suggested subject only to Mr. Hernandez-Purnell agreement to legally completing the sale to the Secretary of State. I understand Mr. Hernandez-Purnell is prepared to proceed on this basis.

You referred to a press statement by the Secretary of State. I am not aware of any press statement by the Secretary of State on 29 April or any other date in connection with Mr. Hernandez-Purnell's case. Mr. Hernandez- Purnell has invited comment on a statement he quotes in his letter of 13 November addressed to the Treasury Solicitor and which he has, I understand, copied to you. That statement is part of a fuller briefing note which was supplied on or around 29 April to a member of the press at her request by the Highways Agency. I enclose a copy of the full note from which you will see that we are dealing with the question of Mr. Hernandez-Purnell's mortgages. The strict legal position is that the Highways Agency on making an advance payment of compensation to Mr. Hernandez-Purnell (or any one else for that matter) did not, nor does not, have to discharge any existing mortgage before completion. However, in order to facilitate a practical and sensible resolution to that part of the dispute between Mr. Hernandez-Purnell and the Highways Agency, we were prepared to redeem Mr. Hernandez-Purnell's mortgages in this exceptional case. The use of the word "illegal" in briefing already referred to is unfortunate, when what was meant of course was extra statutory.

National Road Programme

Mr. Roy Hughes : To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list the parliamentary constituency or constituencies in which each scheme in the national road programme lies.

Mr. Watts [holding answer 29 November 1994]: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. I have asked the chief executive to write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Lawrie Haynes to Mr. Roy Hughes, dated 1 December 1994:

The Minister for Roads and Rail has passed to me your request for a list of parliamentary constituency or constituents for each scheme in the national programme. This is an operational matter for which the Highways Agency is responsible.

The enclosed list includes all schemes in the Agency's preparation programme as listed in Trunk Roads in England 1994 Review.

TREASURY

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Nelson: The following have been employed as special advisers in the Treasury during the last five years:

A. Ross Goobey	1 April 1986	10 April 1991
W. M. Lightfoot	1 September 1989	10 April 1992
P. W. Robinson	11 April 1992	27 May 1993
D. W. D. Cameron	11 May 1992	21 June 1993
R. Darwell	8 February 1993	27 May 1993
Mrs. A. T. Keswick	28 May 1993 to date
D. L. Ruffley	28 May 1993 to date

Sports Clubs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the amount of VAT illegally charged by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise on sports clubs subscriptions since 1 January 1990 which has been (a) claimed back to date by sports clubs, (b) paid back to date by sports clubs and (c) estimated in total as due back to sports clubs; and if he will provide details for (i) England, (ii) Wales and (iii) Scotland.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Customs and Excise estimated that repayment of VAT on sporting services in respect of the period 1 January 1990 to 31 March 1994 would amount to some £42.5 million. Between 1 April 1994 and 30 September 1994, £42 million VAT plus £5 million interest was repaid to non-profit-making organisations supplying sporting services.

To apportion this information between England, Wales and Scotland would involve disproportionate time and expense. The extent to which clubs have passed any of the repayment to their members is not a matter for the Government.

Building Society Merger

Mr. Darling: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what consideration he has given to the proposed merger between the Halifax building society and the Leeds building society; if he proposes to refer the merger to the Director General of the Office of Fair Trading for inquiry; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nelson: I have discussed the proposed merger with representatives of the Halifax building society and the Building Societies Commission, in my capacity as Minister responsible for the building society sector. The decision on whether to refer the proposal to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission under the provisions of the Fair Trading Act 1973 is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in the light of advice from the Director General of Fair Trading, who is currently considering the matter.

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Banqueting Rooms

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee what was the operating surplus or deficit of the banqueting rooms for the last full 12 months for which figures are available.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: A net profit of some £230,000 was made from the use of private dining facilities in 1993–94.

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Chairman of the Catering Committee (1) if he will publish the names of organisations that used the banqueting rooms in the most recent 12 months for which figures are available indicating the numbers who are perceived to be (a) political, (b) commercial, (c) charitable and (d) others;

(2) if he will list the political affiliations of all hon. Members who booked the banqueting rooms in the months of October and November.

Mr. Colin Shepherd: It has not hitherto been the practice to publish information of this nature. The matter is currently being reviewed by the Catering Committee.

NATIONAL HERITAGE

Listed Hospitals

Mr. Cohen : To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what progress has been made by the task force on listed hospitals formed by his Department and the Department of Health.

Mr. Dorrell: The working group on historic hospitals was established by the Department of Health and by English Heritage in Autumn 1992 to provide a forum to identify and assist in resolving problems concerning historic buildings and conservation matters in the NHS. It has commissioned the preparation of good practice guidance for NHS managers in respect of both listed hospitals that will continue in use, and those that will close; this guidance is due for publication at the end of 1994. A study to review the listing of NHS institutions has been commissioned from English Heritage.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dorrell: I refer the hon. Lady to the answer given to the hon. Member for Nottingham, North (Mr. Allen) on 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 110.

Television Licence Fees

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage if he will announce the television licence fees which will take effect from 1 April 1995.

Mr. Dorrell: Following a study by Touche Ross, my predecessor, my right hon. Friend the Member for City of London and Westminster, South (Mr. Brooke) announced on 4 November 1993, Official Report, column 309–10, that the Government had decided to link increases in the television licence fee with the retail prices index for the remaining three years of the BBC's current royal charter.

Licence fee increases are based on the annual RPI figure as at the previous September, in the same way as pensions and other state benefits. Application of this year's RPI figure of 2.2 per cent. for the year to September 1994 to the current unrounded figures produces new rounded totals of £86.50 for a colour licence and £28.50 for a black and white licence. The necessary regulations to bring these fees into force will be laid before the House in due course.

County Hall

Mr. Tony Banks: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage when officials from English Heritage last inspected the riverside building in the County hall complex; and what were their findings on the condition of the building.

Mr. Dorrell [holding answer 29 November 1994]: The riverside building at County hall was last visited by English Heritage staff on 15 November 1994. They found the building to be in good condition.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payment date (a) by up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Dorrell: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94, the Department of National Heritage paid over 85 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Disabled Access

Mr. Chris Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for National Heritage what proposals he has for amendments to the Cinema Act 1910 in relation to access to cinemas for people with disabilities.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have been asked to reply.

The Cinematograph (Safety) Regulations 1955 make detailed provisions for securing safety in cinemas. My hon. Friend the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People announced on 24 November a package of measures to tackle discrimination against disabled people, including a right of access to goods and services.

PRIME MINISTER

Top Salaries

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Prime Minister what steps he is taking, other than exhortation, to make it easier for shareholders to influence the size of the salaries and perks of those at the top of British industry.

The Prime Minister: Shareholders already have the ability to exercise influence—for example, by raising questions at the annual general meeting or, in the case of institutional holdings, by exerting pressure behind the scenes.

Engagements

Sir Peter Tapsell: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 1 December.

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Prime Minister if he will list his official engagements for Thursday 1 December.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with Ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I shall be having further meetings later today.

Standards of Public Life Committee

Mr. Hanson: To ask the Prime Minister if he will now publish the remuneration of the board members and chairman of the Standing Committee into Standards of Public Life.

The Prime Minister: The chairman will receive no remuneration from public funds for his work on the committee. Three members are already in receipt of a salary from public funds and will therefore not receive any further remuneration for their work on the committee. The other six members of the committee will receive an honorarium of £1,000 per month until the first report has been published, and a per diem attendance rate of £155 after that. Their travel and subsistence expenses will be met.

The administrative and support resources for the Nolan committee will be drawn from the Office of Public Service and Science Vote (19 Vote 1).

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Electricity

Mr. Michael Brown: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what further amendments to the Electricity (Class Exemptions from the Requirement for a Licence) Order 1990 are presently proposed.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Under this order, a number of companies which generated or supplied electricity before the electricity industry was vested are exempt from the requirement for a licence to generate or supply electricity for a transitional period, which ends on 31 March 1995.

Following consultation with the electricity industry and others, I have now decided that these transitional exemptions should be extended until 31 March 1998. These exemptions would continue, as now, to be limited to the generating capacity or customer base supplied before vesting. This should not, however, be read as meaning that these companies will necessarily continue to be exempt after 1998. That will be considered in the period leading up to 1998, when the market in electricity supply will become fully competitive.

I will lay an order bringing this amendment into effect early next year. My officials are presently considering a number of other possible amendments to the order. I shall announce our decision on these in due course.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has for the future of electricity supply from foreign sources.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The position in relation to the French interconnector—the only present source of foreign electricity supplies—was set out in the White Paper "The Prospects for Coal" (Cm 2235). Proposals for further interconnectors are a commercial matter for the electricity companies, subject to their obtaining any necessary consents.

Interreg 2

Mr. Ainger: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will give a breakdown of projected annual expenditure under Interreg 2 (a) Northern Ireland, (b) Gwynedd, (c) Dyfed and (d) Kent for each year in which the programme is to run.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Allocations for the period from 1994 to 1999 are as follows, in mecu at 1994 prices:

	Mecu
Northern Ireland	66.9
Gwynedd and Dyfed	13.5
Kent and East Sussex	28.3

Qualifying expenditure may extend until 2001. Annual allocations have not yet been settled.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many occasions in the last year he has received a report from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission and (a) agreed its recommendations and (b) deferred a decision.

Mr. Eggar: Since 1 November 1993, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade has received 14 reports, including one not yet published, from the Monopolies and Mergers Commission. Where adverse reports have been published, he has accepted the MMC's findings. In one case during this period—The Daily Mail and General Trust plc/T. Bailey Forman Ltd.—the MMC report has been published and the final decision deferred pending further consideration of possible remedies. Before that period, there have been other examples of consultation on possible remedies after publication, notably on the MMC reports on the supply of gas, and on the distribution of newspapers.

Nuclear Power

Sir Thomas Arnold: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to announce the result of his review into the future of nuclear power generation.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Sherwood (Mr. Tipping) on 19 October, Official Report, column 239.

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what share of the fossil fuel levy is received by (a) renewable sources of energy, (b) Nuclear Electric and (c) Scottish Nuclear.

Mr. Charles Wardle: For details of payments from the fossil fuel levy to renewable generators and Nuclear Electric, I refer the hon. Member to the answer my hon. Friend the Minister for Industry and Energy gave to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 12 July 1994, Official Report, column 518. Scottish Nuclear does not receive payments from the levy.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the purpose of the fossil fuel levy as paid to Nuclear Electric.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The fossil fuel levy finances the premium element of the price paid by the regional electricity companies for the electricity that they are required to purchase under the non-fossil fuel obligation. In Nuclear Electric's case, the levy payments cover the above-market costs of generating nuclear power. Together with revenues from sales of electricity at market prices, levy payments enable Nuclear Electric to cover the full costs of generating electricity from its stations, including operating costs, depreciation and provisions for the so-called "back end" liabilities.

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what assessment he has made of the appropriateness of Nuclear Electric using the fossil fuel levy to help with its cash flow.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The existing arrangements to enable the full cost of nuclear power in the United Kingdom to be met, including the fossil fuel levy, are being assessed as part of the Government's review of the future prospects for nuclear power.

Electricity Interconnector

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is the purpose of the electricity interconnector with France.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The interconnector was built for mutual system support, and to trade electricity when one country could supply it more cheaply than the other.

Riot Control Equipment

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list (a) the date and (b) the countries involved in the instances during the last 10 years when export licences have been granted for (i) riot shields, (ii) CS gas, (iii) batons and (iv) other riot control equipment.

Mr. Ian Taylor: This question could be answered in respect of controlled goods only at disproportionate cost.

Building Society Merger

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to refer the proposed merger between the Halifax and the Leeds Permanent building societies to the Office of Fair Trading; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Director General of Fair Trading at the Office of Fair Trading is currently investigating this proposed merger and he will advise my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade in due course. A decision on whether it should be referred to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission will be taken once that advice is received.

Regional Assistance, North-West

Mr. Hutton: To ask the President of the Board of Trade, pursuant to his answer of 23 November, Official Report, column 208, if he will list those development and intermediate areas in the North-West where applications for regional selective assistance have been refused.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The information is listed in the following table:

Travel to work area	Number rejected (1 April 1993 to 31 March 1994
Accrington and Rossendale	4
Barrow-in-Furness	4
Blackburn	2
Bolton and Bury	5
Liverpool	23
Manchester	28
Oldham	3
Rochdale	3
Widnes and Runcorn	5
Wigan and St. Helens	19
Wirral and Chester	12
Workington	5
Project location undecided	10
Total	123

Motor Vehicle Industry

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what support or advice was given to the manufacturers of the Robin Reliant prior to the company going into receivership.

Mr. Eggar: My Department was advised, in confidence, of the decision to place Reliant in the hands of the receiver. My officials are in close contact with the receiver about the prospects for the business.

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those United Kingdom-owned car manufacturers in 1987 and at the current date.

Mr. Charles Wardle: At the beginning of 1987, there were 12 United Kingdom-owned manufacturers producing cars. These were: Aston Martin Lagonda, Bristol, Caterham, Ginetta, Jaguar, Marcos, Morgan, Reliant, Rolls-Royce Motor Cars, Rover Group, TVR Engineering and Westfield.

Since then, Aston Martin Lagonda and Jaguar have been acquired by Ford and Rover by BMW. The others remain in the United Kingdom ownership.

Coal Industry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many tonnes of coal were imported by the nationalised electricity power generators in each year between 1980 and denationalisation.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The amount of coal imported by the Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board is shown below. The Department has no records of coal imported by the power producers before 1983 or of any imports by the North of Scotland Hydro Electric Board and the Northern Ireland Electricity Service.

Year	Thousand tonnes
1983[1]	1,020
1984[1]	52
1985[1]	2,656
1986[1]	1,186
1987[1]	1,358
1988[2]	1,973
1989[2, 3]	1,963

[1] Central Electricity Generating Board only.
[2] Central Electricity Generating Board and South of Scotland Electricity Board.
[3] 1989 was the last full year before denationalisation.

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement about the future of British Coal Enterprise following the privatisation of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The Government and British Coal are currently exploring options for the services provided by British Coal Enterprise. No final decisions have yet been taken about its future.

Life Assurance

Mr. Redmond: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will ask the Office of Fair Trading to institute an inquiry into the practices of insurance companies in respect of life assurance premiums for (a) heterosexuals and (b) people who have had a negative test for HIV.

Mr. Jonathan Evans: The Association of British Insurers has recommended to its members that they do not ask questions about negative HIV tests on life and health insurance proposal forms. I have placed a copy of the association's press release in the Library of the House.

Japanese-owned Plutonium

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what quantities of Japanese-owned plutonium exists in (a) unreprocessed nuclear fuel awaiting reprocessing and (b) in store after reprocessing, under safeguards at Sellafield.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The stocks of civil plutonium held by British Nuclear Fuels plc at its Sellafield site were published in the annual plutonium figures for 1993–94, copies of which were placed in the Library of the House. Further details of the ownership of the stocks are an operational matter for BNFL.

Post Office

Ms Hoey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he intends to give more commercial freedom to the publicly owned Post Office.

Mr. Heseltine: I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to the hon. Member for Lewisham, West (Mr. Dowd) on 23 November, Official Report, column 579.

Floating Production Systems

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement in connection with his proposals of July 1994 to establish a working group on floating production systems for use in oil fields in the North sea and the Atlantic; if he will list the names and positions of those appointed to the working group of floating production systems; what estimate he has made of the development costs of the Foinaven and Schiehallion oil fields to the west of Shetland; and what percentage of this work he assesses will be allocated to domestically based support services.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 November 1994]: The working group on floating production systems has been set up and will report to Ministers by the end of the year. The industry members are listed below.

The operator responsible—BP—for the development of the Foinaven and Schiehallion oil fields to the west of Shetland has estimated development costs for Foinaven to be £550 million and has estimated that around 70 per cent. of this expenditure will be allocated to the United Kingdom. Schiehallion is not yet far enough advanced to estimate development costs.

Floating production systems working group industry membership

Name
Mr. Mike Baugh	Hamilton
Mr. Martin Fielding	Amerada Hess
Mr. Chris Grey	Conoco
Mr. Alan Hunt	Shell
Mr. John Hutton	Texaco
Dr. Rob Kenison	BP
Dr. Reg Potter	Marathon

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how many contracts have so far been allocated to United Kingdom-based companies in connection with research into, and development of, floating production systems.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 29 November 1994]: A large number of R and D projects have been sponsored by oil companies and the Government, associated with floating production systems. However, many of these projects are not unique to floating production systems. They also apply to other aspects of offshore technology so it is not possible to assign numbers in the way that hon. Lady requested.

Konver Programme

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will list those local authorities and private and voluntary organisations currently in receipt of grant aid from the Konver programme.

Mr. Charles Wardle [holding answer 30 November 1994]: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given by the then Minister for Industry, my right hon. Friend the Member for Hove (Mr. Sainsbury) on 10 December 1993, Official Report, column 426. The lists of grant awards under the Knover I programme available in the Library of the House show the main sponsor for each project only. I shall write to the hon. Member with a full list of project sponsors.

Overseas Debt

Sir Anthony Durant: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what is his policy on support for exports to countries which have rescheduled their debts and have re-established their creditworthiness.

Mr. Needham: Following a review of its risk assessment systems for those markets, the Export Credits Guarantee Department will now be adopting normal underwriting criteria to assess applications for support from United Kingdom exporters, the principal criterion being the ability of the overseas buyer or borrower to meet it debts on time. The main consequence of applying normal criteria will be to broaden the range of exports eligible for support, and significant reductions in premium rates on a number of markets. The Government will also be pursuing an initiative in international forums to ensure that the prime focus of export credit and other financial support in such markets will be upon goods and services which will foster and sustain their economic rehabilitation.

WALES

Welsh Health Promotion Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales when he plans to publish the district auditor's report on the Welsh Health Promotion Authority.

Mr. Richards: This report was published by the Health Promotion Authority for Wales on 8 August 1994. Copies can be obtained from the authority.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Redwood: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94, the Welsh Office paid 87 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the Staff Commission for Wales and the local authority associations in relation to the carrying over of existing staff to the new authorities on 1 April 1996.

Mr. Redwood: The Under-Secretary, my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, North (Mr. Jones) held an annual review meeting with the staff commission on 14 November: staff transfer arrangements were among the matters discussed. My officials maintain close contact with the Staff Commission and local authority associations, and are discussing with them how best to give effect to the guidance which I issued to the commission in August.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for funding the new residuary body for Wales by (a) precept and (b) other means.

Mr. Redwood: I have decided that the residuary body should be funded by means of borrowing under a supplementary credit approval in 1994–95 and 1995–96. It would be funded by levies on local authorities in 1996–97 and any subsequent years. It would not have any power to issue a precept. I wrote to the hon. Member for Caerphilly (Mr. Davies) on 2 November informing him of my decision. This letter was copied to the hon. Member for Caernarfon (Mr. Wigley) and the hon. and learned Member for Montgomery (Mr. Carlile).

Houses in Multiple Occupation

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what representations he has received from (a) local authorities and (b) other organisations in relation to the responsibilities for examining health and safety standards in houses in multiple occupation with respect to (i) self-regulation and independent regulation and (ii) duties of environmental health officers and fire officers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have received representations from the all-Wales chief environmental health officers panel, the Wales house in multiple occupation network, the Institution of Environmental Health Officers, South Wales, Cardiff city council and Llanelli borough council about these issues as part of the interdepartmental review on fire safety legislation and enforcement. The responses are currently being considered.

Incentive Prescribing Scheme

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list those general practices approved to take part in an incentive prescribing scheme, which have (a) commenced and (b) not commenced their participation.

Mr. Redwood: Prescribing incentive schemes have now been approved in seven family health services authorities. Participation in schemes is a matter for local agreement and details of the numbers of participating practices are not held centrally.

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what proposals he has for the application of value-added school league tables to grant-maintained schools.

Mr. Redwood: I am committed to the principle that a readily understood measure of added value should be included in secondary school performance tables covering LEA-maintained, grant-maintained and independent schools. Work is in hand to develop such measures.

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the head teachers and chairs of governors of grant-maintained schools concerning the supply of information to local authorities for the purpose of drawing up value added school league tables.

Mr. Redwood: None. I look to all concerned to collaborate on the important issue of how to show the extent to which schools add value to pupil performance.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what consultations he has had with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation and the chairman of the court of governors at the National Museum of Wales, concerning (a) the expansion and relocation of the Wales Industrial and Maritime Museum, inclusive of an Imax cinema and (b) the funding of a private sector free-standing Imax cinema; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Redwood: I have had no discussions with the chairman of the Cardiff Bay development corporation regarding proposals to develop the Welsh Industrial and Maritime Museum; in May the chairman did briefly explain to me the aims of the Imax venture and how it might be associated with educational or museum institutions in the Cardiff bay area.

In June, my right hon. Friend the Member for Conwy (Sir W. Roberts) received a presentation from the National Museum of Wales on its corporate plan, including proposals to develop the Welsh Industrial and Maritime Museum and an Imax theatre.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Redwood: Details of special advisers employed by my Department in the last five years are as follows:

Mr. R. Richards	5 November 1990	14 December 1990
Mr. M. McManus	11 November 1992	27 May 1993
Mr. H. Williams	18 October 1993	(still in post)

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings and are confidential. The salary spine of 34 points ranges from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Police Authority Revenue

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what are his proposals for police authority revenue spending in 1995–96.

Mr. Redwood: I propose to make £300.7 million available from total standard spending in Wales to fund police services in 1995–96. This sum comprises £153.7 million in cash-limited police grant to be paid by the Home Secretary and £147.0 million in standard spending assessments. It represents an overall increase of 6 per cent. on police revenue budgets for 1994–95. The sums for each police authority are set out in the following table:

	Police grant £ millions	SSA £ millions	Total £ millions
Dyfed-Powys	22.5	21.7	44.2
Gwent	24.1	23.3	47.4
North Wales	32.2	30.6	62.8
South Wales	74.8	71.4	146.2

The Welsh Office is today writing to each of the police authorities in Wales to consult them on their provisional standard spending assessment for 1995–96.

It is essential that police authorities budget wisely and do not impose an unreasonable burden on council taxpayers. I therefore propose provisional capping principles to inform their budget decisions.

I will make my final decisions on capping principles in the light of budgets set by police authorities.

I am still considering my capping proposals for county and district councils in Wales and propose to announce provisional capping principles for these authorities in mid-December, when provisional county and district SSAs are announced.

Copies of the consultation letter will be place in the Library of the House.

Quangos

Mrs. Clwyd: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales how members of quangos to which he is responsible for appointing members currently serve as councillors representing (a) the Conservative party, (b) the Labour party and (c) the Liberal Democrat party.

Mr. Redwood [holding answer Friday 25 November]: The information requested is as follows:

At 1 September 1994, 31 members of public bodies appointed by me were serving district or county councillors. These represented:

Conservative: 3

Labour: 17

Liberal Democrat: 0

Independent: 11

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT ADMINISTRATION

Construction Projects

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list all the construction projects funded by Overseas Development Administration aid and awarded in whole or in part to United Kingdom construction companies in 1992–93 and 1993–94, and in each case stating the name of the United Kingdom construction company, the value of the contracts awarded to that company and the location, by country, of the project.

Mr. Baldry: There is no central historical record of aid-funded construction projects. Contracts for such projects are normally negotiated and let by the recipient Governments. A new reporting mechanism is now being established, but at present the information requested could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

DUCHY OF LANCASTER

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: The CCTA Government information service was launched at the consultative meeting on information super-highways on 21 November. The service is designed to help Departments to make United Kingdom Government public information available electronically via the Internet, using the world wide web—WWW—hypertext information servers.

The aims of the service are to support the objectives of the citizens charter and open government; publish Government information; and provide a means by which Government Departments can gain experience of publishing information on Internet.

The Office of Public Service and Science has been at the forefront in exploiting the service. The hon. Member can access, via Internet, information on the citizens charter unit, the open government code of practice, a directory of Government Ministers and Whips, and HMSO's information technology catalogue. CCTA, the Government Centre for Information Systems, is talking to other parts of the Cabinet Office, and further information will become available in due course.

CCTA's booklet for Internet users, "CCTA Government Information Service: How to access information", is available in the House of Commons Library.

Disabled People

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster if he will invite Departments and agencies to advise Ministers if they intend to use buildings inaccessible to disabled staff or members of the public.

Mr. Robert G. Hughes: As I informed the House on 21 November, I have already asked my officials to conduct a review of my Department's buildings, so that we know which buildings are accessible and which are not.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. David Hunt: The information is not generally available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. Based on a sample survey carried out during 1993–94, the Cabinet Office paid 78 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days. HMSO achieved 80 per cent., and COI 83 per cent.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. David Hunt: Information on the Cabinet Office can be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

United Nations

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs on what legal basis the United Nations protects the civilian population in the safe areas in cases where their inhabitants have attacked other territory.

Mr. David Davis: The mandate of the United Nations Protection Force—UNPROFOR—under Security Council resolution 836 enables it to deter attacks against the safe areas referred to in Security Council resolution 824. In doing so, UNPROFOR is authorised by resolution 836, acting in self-defence, to take the necessary measures, including the use of force, in reply to bombardments against the safe areas or to armed incursion into them.

These provisions apply, even, where offensive action has been undertaken from within the safe areas.

Sudan

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further measures he proposes to show her Majesty's Government's disapproval of the human rights record of the Sudanese regime; and if he will further reduce the British diplomatic presence in Sudan.

Mr. David Davis: Monitoring human right abuses and raising concerns about these with the Sudanese authorities will remain one of the principal tasks of Her Majesty's embassy in Khartoum. We have no plans to reduce the number of staff there.

Mr. Donald Anderson: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has made to the Sudanese regime about the continued restrictions on the liberty of the former Prime Minister, Sadiq Al Mahdi.

Mr. David Davis: Her Majesty's embassy in Khartoum made representations to the Sudanese authorities during Sadiq Al Mahdi's detention for three weeks earlier this year. Sadiq Al Mahdi was released on 3 July. The embassy will continue to monitor his treatment by the authorities.

Arms Exports

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs which countries in Central and Latin America have been the subject of arms exports licence refusals in 1993 on the grounds of internal oppression or regional security.

Mr. Davis: The only country in central and Latin America to which applications for arms export licences were refused in 1993 on the grounds of internal oppression or regional security is Argentina, to which we maintain an embargo on military sales in the light of the events of 1982 and the Argentine claim to the Falkland Islands.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94, the Foreign and Commonwealth Office, diplomatic wing paid 95 per cent. and the Overseas Development Administration 88 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Kashmir

Mrs Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has had regarding the torture and execution of human rights activists in Kashmir; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have had no reports of the torture or execution of human rights activists in Kashmir.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what recent reports he has had of Kashmiris suffering human rights abuses at the hands of Indian troops; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We are concerned by reports from international human rights groups of human rights abuses committed by the Indian security forces in Kashmir. We have regularly raised these concerns with the Indian Government.

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will call for (a) international investigations of human rights violations in Kashmir, (b) international humanitarian agencies to be allowed direct and independent access to the region, (c) the prosecution and punishment of those responsible for murdering and torturing Kashmiri people and (d) the right to self-determination for Kashmiris as promised by the United Nations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Baldry: We have consistently urged the Indian Government to allow independent human rights groups access to Kashmir. We are encouraged that they have allowed a number of such groups to visit Kashmir this year. We have also urged them to ensure that security force members are subject to the rule of law. We shall continue to support efforts to bring about a peaceful settlement in Kashmir.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Goodlad: The special advisers to this Department are Mr. Maurice Fraser and Mr. Michael Maclay.

On 1 March 1989, Mr. Maurice Fraser joined the Department and is still employed here. On 1 November 1989, the hon. Member for Aylesbury (Mr. Lidington) joined the Department; he left on 15 December 1990. On 7 January 1991, Mr. Edward Bickham joined the Department; he left on 9 July 1993. On 19 July 1993, Mr Michael Maclay joined the Department and is still employed here.

With regard to salary, I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Leicester, East (Mr. Vaz) on 25 November, Official Report, column 413.

Overseas Students

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many overseas students are now studying in the United Kingdom in the higher and further education sectors; what the numbers were before the introduction of full cost fees in 1980; how many students are currently receiving Government scholarships; and how the United Kingdom's record on receiving overseas students compares to that of its competitors.

Mr. Baldry: The numbers of overseas students studying in the United Kingdom in both the higher and further education sectors in 1979–80 was some 83,000. The number in 1992–93 was 99,700, an all-time high. In 1993–94 21,000 students from overseas studying in the United Kingdom were benefiting from official support under a variety of British Government scholarship and award programmes. These included 3,043 students holding British Chevening scholarships funded by the Foreign and Commonwealth Office.

According to available figures, the United Kingdom is fourth in the global league table of countries receiving overseas students with 92,000, against the United States, 420,000, France, 136,000 and Germany, 100,000.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Cross-border Barriers

Mr. Enright: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what progress has been made in dismantling the barriers to free movement across the border.

Sir John Wheeler: All closure orders have been rescinded. More than 40 previously closed crossing points are presently open to traffic. The great majority should be reopened within a matter of months.

Tourism

Mr. Simon Coombs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the potential for tourism in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: Tourism in Northern Ireland clearly has the potential to contribute significantly to the local economy. The Northern Ireland tourist board is working closely with the tourism industry to ensure that this potential is turned into reality.

The announcement last week of a £6.8 million joint marketing initiative by the tourism authorities in Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland, together with the private sector, will do much to capitalise on new opportunities.

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what steps are being taken to improve cross-border co-operation in tourism.

Mr. Ancram: The Northern Ireland tourist board works closely with its counterpart in the Republic of Ireland, Bord Failte, jointly to market the island of Ireland as a quality tourist destination. Both Governments announced last week that this co-operation will be further developed and expanded.

Social Policy

Mr. Wicks: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his Department's social policy strategy.

Mr. Ancram: The Government remain committed to addressing the social needs of the people of Northern Ireland, in particular through targeting social need initiative, which is aimed at directing resources to the most disadvantaged areas and people.

Peace Process

Mr. Barnes: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on recent developments concerning the Downing street declaration.

Mr. Canavan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what recent discussions he has had about furthering the peace process; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Winnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the latest position over the ceasefire.

Mr. Parry: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the peace process in Ulster.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I refer the hon. Members to the oral answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Sunderland, North (Mr. Etherington) earlier today.

Brendan Smyth

Mr. Mackinlay: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement as to what initiatives the Government took to effect the extradition of Brendan Smyth following the serving on the Gardai of extradition warrants by the RUC in April 1993.

Sir John Wheeler: I refer the hon. Member to the answer given to him by my right hon. and learned Friend the Attorney-General on 21 November, Official Report, columns 37–38.

Hualon Project

Mr. Beggs: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the current position and future of the Hualon project in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Ancram: All necessary approvals for the project are in place and further progress and the release of the first tranche of IDB money depends on Hualon fulfilling certain obligations contained in the agreement with the Industrial Development Board.

The British Apparel and Textile Confederation lodged an appeal on 30 November with the European Court of Justice.

Mrs. Ann Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will now review his decision to proceed with grant payments to the Hualon Corporation.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. and learned Friend has recently reviewed and confirmed his decision, the implementation of which will depend upon the fulfilment by Hualon of certain preconditions.

We have no plans for a further review.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he last met representatives of the Hualon Corporation.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: On 9 June 1994.

Mr. Dowd: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement regarding aid to the Hualon Corporation.

Mr. Ancram: The Hualon project, which will make a major reduction in unemployment, was the subject of a lengthy and detailed appraisal before the decision to offer assistance was taken.

The advice of independent consultants was obtained and the project has received all the necessary approvals from HMG and the EC. To date no assistance has been paid, and none will be until certain pre-conditions are satisfied.

Environmental Protection Agency

Mr. A. Cecil Walker: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what further consideration he has given to the formation of an environmental protection agency for Northern Ireland.

Mr. Moss: All the functions of the Department of Environment environment service are currently the subject of a prior options study. The Government will decide whether or not any proposals for change in the implementation of environmental policy in Northern Ireland should be made when the results of the study are known. The outcome of the study is likely to be announced early in 1995.

Unemployment

Mr. John Marshall: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the change in numbers of unemployed since December 1992.

Mr. Ancram: The latest available seasonally adjusted figures, for October 1994, show that the number of unemployed claimants has fallen by 11,500 since December 1992.

Paramilitaries

Mr. Robathan: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the moves that have been made by the IRA and loyalist paramilitaries to withdraw the threat of military action against people whom they have forced into exile and who are still unable to return to their homes.

Sir John Wheeler: Such actions are incompatible with the disavowal of the use of violence for political purposes.

Dr. Kim Howells: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what plans he has to meet members of the former loyalist paramilitary groups in Northern Ireland.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: I have no plans to do so.

Examination Results

Sir Teddy Taylor: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what assessment he has made of the reasons for the relative success of children living in Northern Ireland in GCSE and A-level exams in comparison with other parts of the Untied Kingdom.

Mr. Ancram: In Northern Ireland pupils entered for GCSE and A-levels have a good record of success. I believe that the motivation of pupils, parental support and the fact that we have highly professional and dedicated teaching staff are the key elements which have contributed to those high standards.

I have made no assessment of the reasons for differences with other parts of the United Kingdom.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Sir John Wheeler: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94 the Northern Ireland Office and Northern Ireland Departments paid 95 per cent. of their bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Sir Patrick Mayhew: Mr. Jonathan Caine was appointed special adviser by my predecessor in December 1991. He resigned in March 1992 and I re-appointed him as my special adviser in June 1992.

No other special advisers have joined or left the Northern Ireland Office in the last five years.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Mr. Vaz: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement concerning the cost to public funds of employing ministerial special advisers in his Department.

Sir Patrick Mayhew [holding answer 23 November 1994]: My Department employs one special adviser.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Industrial Development Board

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland who is the chairman of the Northern Ireland Industrial Development Board; when he was appointed to that position; when he is expected to retire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 November 1994]: Mr. John B. McGuckian was appointed chairman of the Northern Ireland Industrial Development Board on 1 January 1992, having served a period of 15 months as a member of the board. His term of office as chairman is due to expire on 31 December 1994.

Public Appointments

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make it his policy not to appoint to public office individuals described in statements resulting from hearings by the Lord Chief Justice and other Lords of Appeal as being disingenuous in their dealings with the Inland Revenue; and if he will make a statement.

Sir John Wheeler: In relation to public appointments, the prime consideration for Ministers and Departments are an individual's ability or potential to contribute to the work of a particular body and the need for each public body to have the range of experience and skills necessary to carry out its functions.

An individual's background and overall conduct are factors taken in to account before an appointment is made.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton: To ask the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement setting out the background to the case presented in the Northern Ireland Court of Appeal by lawyers representing the Inland Revenue in the case relating to Mr. John McGuckian; what sums of money were involved in this case; what was the outcome; what plans he has to review recent decisions relating to the Hualon Corporation taken by Mr. McGuckian as chairman of the Northern Ireland Industrial Development Fund as a result of this case; what previous cases, and involving what sums, have been brought against Mr. McGuckian for non-payment of taxes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram [holding answer 24 November 1994]: Mr. McGuckian's personal tax affairs are not matters for my right hon. and learned Friend. Nor do they have anything to do with decisions relating to the Hualon Corporation.

HEALTH

North-West Hospitals

Mr. Meacher: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of employees, plus the number of volunteers currently assisting, at each hospital in the north-west; and what percentage the latter forms of the former.

Mr. Malone: Information on the number of employees is collected by management unit—that is, by national health service trust or directly managed unit—rather than by hospital; and information on volunteers is not available centrally.

Benzodiazepines

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the net ingredient cost of (a) temazepam, (b) zopiclone and (c) all other benzodiazepines in the United Kingdom and each NHS region and family health service authority area for 1993–94; and if he will express the net ingredient cost figure as expenditure per head of population in each such area.

Mr. Malone: The available information will be placed in the Library.

NHS Estates

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health why the NHS Estates moved into accommodation off Boar lane, Leeds; what consideration was given to moving into Quarry house, Leeds; what was the cost of the move; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The initial relocation plan was that NHS Estates would relocate to Quarry house with the national health service executive. Because of design and other changes during the construction of Quarry house, there was not enough room to accommodate all the posts concerned, and separate accommodation was taken for the agency in Trevelyan square, Boar lane, Leeds. The transitional costs of the move and the costs of fitting out Trevelyan square were £1.93 million.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what was the outcome of the review of the NHS Estates; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: The first review of NHS Estates Agency has recently been completed. I have today placed a summary of the review's findings in the Library.

Professional Misconduct

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that medical practitioners found guilty by the General Medical Council of serious professional misconduct be suspended with immediate effect; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: It is a matter for the professional conduct committee of the General Medical Council to decide whether a doctor is fit to continue practising after he has been found guilty of serious professional misconduct.

Confidentiality

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute an inquiry into medical confidentiality in respect of members of the medical profession whose medical or psychiatric condition might result in damage to patients; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No.

Equal Opportunities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what advice she gives to health authorities and NHS trusts on equal opportunities policy; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: National health service authorities and trusts are expected to comply with the aims and goals of the NHS executive's "Opportunity 2000" programme, and of "Ethnic minority staff in the NHS: a programme of action". Copies of those programmes are available in the Library. In addition, the General Whitley Council has made agreements promoting equal opportunities which apply to all staff employed on national terms and conditions of service.

NHS Managers Conference

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who was responsible for inviting the NHS managers to attend a meeting at the Belfry on 5 to 7 December; what is the projected cost of the exercise; and from which vote the expenditure will be drawn.

Mr. Malone: The national health service executive intended to hold a working conference at the Belfry on 6 to 7 December. The event was cancelled in August.

Community Care

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many hospitals were used for the care of mentally ill people before the introduction of care in the community; how many of these properties have been sold; what have been the total sums raised through the sale of such property and land; how much of this has been re-invested into care in the community; how many sales are still pending; what is the estimated value of such sales when realised; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Care in the community of mentally ill people has been steadily introduced since the 1960s. The information requested is not available centrally.

Mrs. Lait: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when her Department expects to have concluded its consideration of the second report of the National Audit Office on the implementation of community care.

Mr. Bowis: I understand that the Audit Commission, which monitors the implementation of community care by local authorities, plans to publish its second bulletin on progress with community care shortly.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she proposes to make an announcement on the future of the Government's community care policy.

Mr. Bowis: We have today announced the Government's plan to bring the total extra resources for community care to more than £2.5 billion by 1997–98.

I am also today publishing indicative allocations showing each English social services authority's share of the special transitional grant for community care in 1995–96. As last year, the whole of the STG is being distributed on the basis of personal social services standard spending assessments. Authorities have until 13 January 1995 to make representations about their proposed allocations. Copies of the circular are being placed in the Library. The total STG for 1995–96 will, as previously announced, be £647.6 million.

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether she intends to retain the 85 per cent. condition associated with the special transitional grant for community care.

Mr. Bowis: The Government remain fully committed to a flourishing independent sector able to offer diversity, choice and value for money. We will therefore retain the condition on the special transitional grant for community care in 1995–96 whereby authorities must spend 85 per cent. of the social security transfer element—some £440 million in all—on community care services in the independent sector. The condition will be framed in a way that such independent sector spending in 1995–96 must be in addition to previous such spending in 1994–95 and 1993–94 plus one half of such spending in 1992–93.

Rosemary Storrs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health who authorised the ex-gratia payment to Rosemary Storrs, the former information director of Wessex regional health authority in October 1992.

Mr. Sackville: Although the payment was approved by the Wessex regional health authority, appropriate authorisation was not sought from my Department, and the payment was therefore ultra vires.

Such payments are in principle recoverable and the authority must consider, in the light of legal advice, whether recovery action is feasible or cost effective.

Toxoplasmosis

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she is taking to reduce the incidence of toxoplasmosis; what is her policy towards the testing of pregnant women for toxoplasmosis; and what studies into toxoplasmosis are currently supported with public funding.

Mr. Sackville: The Department of Health produces a leaflet entitled "While you are Pregnant - safe eating and how to avoid infection from food and animals" which contains information on avoiding toxoplasmosis. Copies of the leaflet will be placed in the Library. The Health Education Authority produces its pregnancy book which also contains information on toxoplasmosis and which is provided to women when they attend hospital antenatal clinics; copies of this book are available in the Library. Additionally, the Department provides core funding to the Toxoplasmosis trust under section 64 of the Health Services and Public Health Act 1968.

The decision to test a pregnant woman who may have been exposed to toxoplasmosis for evidence of infection must be made on a case-by-case basis. In the light of current scientific knowledge, a routine screening programme cannot be justified. Screening for toxoplasmosis in pregnancy is not a standard procedure in the United Kingdom. The significance of the test, the natural history of the disease and the efficacy of the treatment are all surrounded by uncertainty. As for any screening programme, the benefits conferred by screening must clearly outweigh the risks.

The main agency through which the Government support biomedical and clinical research is the Medical Research Council, which receives its grant in aid from the office of my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster. The MRC is currently funding research into "Seriodiagnosis of reactivating toxoplasmosis: use of cyst antigens" at St. George's Hospital medical school, London, and "Protection against toxoplasmosis: an alternative target for vaccination" at the university of Strathclyde. Universities and medical schools which are supported by public funding may also be funding research into toxoplasmosis.

Mr. Nicholas Brown: To ask the Secretary of State for health what response she is making to toxoplasmosis week.

Mr. Sackville: We welcome this initiative, which we hope will raise awareness about toxoplasmosis and how to avoid catching it, particularly in pregnant women, reinforcing advice given as part of antenatal care.

Community Clinics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure that (a) purchasing authorities retain and, where necessary, develop community clinics and (b) provider units provide a service which complements that provided by general practitioners; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is for general practitioners and purchasing authorities to assess local health needs and to secure the most appropriate services to meet those needs.

Financial Information Project Ltd.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health whether the transfer of £300,000 to Financial Information Project Ltd. has been repaid.

Mr. Sackville: This is a matter for West Midlands regional health authority, which is taking action to recover the loan. The hon. Member may wish to contact Mr. Bryan Baker, regional chairman for details.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by her Department and Government agencies answerable to her Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mr. Sackville [pursuant to his reply, 25 November 1994, c. 408–09]: I regret that my previous reply should have read: "Disaggregrated information of this nature is not available. Any such costs which may arise are covered by the hospitality expenditure of the Department which is included in the running costs sum published in the annual report, copies of which are available in the Library."

South Birmingham Health Authority

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will order an inquiry into the payments made to the director of finance of South Birmingham health authority and his subsequent employment as a consultant to the national health service executive at Chipping Norton; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No. The Public Accounts Committee in its 36th report fully considered the affairs of South Birmingham health authority and the position of the former director of finance. Copies of the report and the Government's response are available in the Library.

Midwives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what instructions she gave for midwives to meet out-patients in reception areas to comply with patient charter standards.

Mr. Malone: None. The way in which women are received in out-patients clinics is a matter for local arrangement. The patients charter standard on the named midwife is that each pregnant woman shall have a named qualified midwife allocated to her.

Seriously Incapacitated Patients

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will provide guidelines to health authorities on their responsibilities to provide continuing care for seriously incapacitated patients, in the light of the findings by the health service commissioner—case Number 1 E 62/93–94—and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: Draft guidance on "NHS responsibilities for meeting long-term health care needs", copies of which are available in the Library, was issued for consultation on 12 August.

Consultation Exercises

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what (1) guidelines are issued by her Department regarding the procedure of consultation exercises on the future of hospital services; to which authorities these guidelines are issued; and if she will make a statement;

(2) if she will list the amount of time allocated for each consultation exercise on the future of hospital services that have taken place in the last year for which figures are available; and if she will make a statement;

(3) how many consultation exercises have been held on the future of hospital services in the last year for which figures are available; if she will list the regional health authorities involved; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Guidance (EL(90)185) to health authorities in September 1990 reminded them of the need to consult potential users of services as an integral part of the management process. District health authorities are required by the Community Health Council Regulations 1985, as amended, to consult the relevant community health council on proposals which would result in substantial changes to services. Changes may be made without consultation if the authority has expressly decided that, in the interest of the health service, a decision has to be taken without allowing time for consultation. Except in such cases, sufficient time should be allowed for views to be taken and advice given. Consultations are a matter for local health authorities; information on numbers and duration is not available centrally. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

Employment Practices

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) what plans she has to prevent the re-employment as consultants by the NHS of NHS trust directors who have left or been terminated for unacceptable professional standards;

(2) what action she has taken, or plans to take to ensure, that directors and managers of regional health authorities and NHS trusts who have been involved in improper, dishonest or incompetent practices, cannot be further employed either directly or as consultants to other health authorities or NHS trusts.

Mr. Malone: None. It is for the individual employer to use its normal recruitment procedures, which will involve references from previous employers, to ensure that prospective consultants and staff are suitable for the job concerned. I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave him on 29 November, Official Report, column 590, on the employment of consultants.

Paramedical Training

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to disallow NHS trusts from charging existing or potential staff for training in paramedical skills.

Mr. Sackville: Funding arrangements for paramedic training are a matter for local trusts to determine in conjunction with their purchasing health authorities.

Financial Interests

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to require all members of health authorities and trusts to publish in public registers any relevant financial interests.

Mr. Malone: The "Code of Conduct and Accountability" requires chairmen and board members to declare any private interests that might be material and relevant to national health service business. Such information should then be recorded in board minutes and entered into a register which is available to the public. Copies of the code of conduct are available in the Library.

Cornwall Healthcare Trust

Mr. Remond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she has made a decision on the payment of libel lawsuit fees in the Cornwall Healthcare trust case; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No. The matter is still under consideration.

John Gunn

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when John Gunn was first appointed to a health authority/trust; and if she will list his subsequent appointments or reappointments.

Mr. Malone: We have no record of a John Gunn holding any non-executive appointment with a national health service authority or trust.

Expenditure

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the level of spending per head of population on national health service provision in each health district in England and Wales.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply the then Minister of Health, my right hon. Friend the Member for Peterborough (Dr. Mawhinney) gave the hon. Member for Darlington (Mr. Milburn) on 26 May, 1994, Official Report column 305. Information relating to Wales is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales.

Hepetitis C

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many haemophiliac patients are known to have contracted hepatitis C as a consequence of contaminated blood; how many are known to have died; what representations she has received from relatives; how she has replied; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: Figures are not available centrally for haemophilia patients who have contracted hepatitis C through contaminated blood, or for those who have died. I understand from the United Kingdom haemophilia directors that, of 126 haemophilia patients known to have died in 1993, 12 showed the cause of death as liver disease, of which hepatitis C may have been the cause. Some representations have been received seeking payments to haemophilia patients who may have been infected with hepatitis C. We have responded that the Government have no plans to make such payments.

Consultants

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she plans to reduce the disparity in the number of consultants per head of population between regions, with particular reference to Trent regional health authority.

Mr. Malone: There are no central plans for modifying the number of consultants between regions. It is a matter for each employing body to determine the number of consultants needed in each specialty in the light of local needs and competing priorities.

Limited Drug List

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the estimated total saving for each stage in respect of the introduction of the limited drug list.

Mr. Sackville: It is not possible to produce estimates which separate the impact of the selected list scheme from other factors which influence the size of the drugs bill.

NHS Employees' Complaints

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will issue guidance to allow national health service employees to bring to the attention of community health councils their concerns about services and patient care without the threat of disciplinary action being taken against them; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: The national health service executive's "Guidance to staff on relations with the public and the media: EL(93)51" clearly sets out the rights and duties of staff when raising issues of concern about health care matters and shows how employers may ensure these rights and duties are met. The guidance makes it plain that employees who raise their concerns in accordance with the guidance are not to be penalised in any way for doing so. Copies of the guidance are available in the Library.

NHS and NHS Trust Directors

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will introduce legislation to render NHS and NHS trust directors liable to surcharge.

Mr. Malone: No.

Ambulance Response Times

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will give, by ambulance authority in England, the number of patients who died in 1993 following ambulance delays outside patients charter limits.

Mr. Sackville: This information is not available.

Patients (Failed Appointments)

Mr. Jessel: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the approximate percentage of patients failing to show up, without giving notice, for appointments with (a) consultants and (b) other hospital doctors in (i) each general hospital in the South Thames region, (ii) West Middlesex University hospital and (iii) teaching hospitals in London north of the River Thames.

Mr. Sackville: The information requested is in "Outpatients and Ward Attenders, England, Financial Year 1993–94" copies of which are available in the Library.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Health (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in her Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by her Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Mr. Sackville: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993, the Department of Health paid 87.1 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the special advisers employed by her Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left her Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Sackville: The special advisers employed by the Department over the last five years are:

Name
Mrs. T Keswick	January 1989 to November 1990
Mrs. L Campey	December 1990 to April 1992
Mrs. K Ramsay	December 1990 to April 1992
Mr. R Marsh	June 1991 to April 1992 and from April 1992 to the present day

Kidney Donor Register

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what steps she proposes to take to publicise the new kidney donor register; and what budgetary provision she has made for this.

Mr. Sackville: We are presently considering the next phase of publicity in support of the national health service organ donor register.

Personal Social Services

Mr. Congdon: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what specific grants and capital resources she is making available to local authorities for the personal social services for 1995–96.

Mr. Bowis: Specific grants will again be available in 1995–96 for mental illness services—£47.3 million—HIV and AIDS—£13.4 million—alcohol and drugs misuse—£2.5 million—guardian ad litem and reporting officers—£6.2 million—and social services training—£34.6 million. The mental illness grant will increase by £11.3 million which will be targeted on people with severe mental illness. Each grant will continue to support a maximum of 70 per cent. of total expenditure.

Annual capital guidelines of £124.3 million will be distributed to local authorities. Supplementary credit approvals will again be available for information technology for community care—£12.2 million—mental illness—£11.4 million—and AIDS and HIV services—£3.1 million. The capital grant for secure accommodation for children will continue in 1995–96. The level of grant will be announced later.

SCOTLAND

Farmer's Allowances

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total cost of (a) hill livestock compensatory allowance and (b) sheep annual premium for each year since 1985; and what the percentage change was in each case on the previous year.

Sir Hector Monro: The information is set out in the following table.

Hill livestock compensatory allowances and sheep annual premium expenditure 1985–1993

Year	HLCA £ million	Percentage change on previous year	SAP £ million	Percentage change on previous year
1985	37.9	—	27.2	—
1986	42.9	+13.2	19.4	–28.7
1987	42.8	–0.2	23.9	+23.2
1988	43.5	+1.6	24.4	+2.1
1989	45.1	+3.7	28.5	+16.8
1990	48.1	+6.7	40.3	+41.4
1991	56.1	+17.7	65.3	+62.0
1992	57.0	+1.6	96.2	+47.3
1993	50.7	–11.1	99.1	+3.0

Highland Area Supplement

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will produce figures for the value of the special highland area supplement for the years 1992 to date; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The value of the HLCA supplements paid in the Highlands and Islands Enterprise area are unchanged since 1992. For sheep the supplement is 64p on top of the rate paid to hardy breed sheep in the severely disadvantaged areas. For cows in the severely disadvantaged areas the supplement varies according to the grading of the farm. For grade A farms, the supplement is £3.05 per cow, for grade B, £11.59 per cow and for grade C, £15.86 per cow.

Less-favoured Areas

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total subsidies to the less-favoured areas for each year since 1985, inclusive; and if he will indicate what the change was between successive years.

Sir Hector Monro: Agricultural livestock subsidies paid exclusively to the less-favoured areas are the hill livestock compensatory allowances and the sheep annual premium supplement. Expenditure for both is set out in the following table:

Year	HLCA Exp £ million	Percentage change on previous year	SAP LFA supplement £ million	Percentage change on previous year
1985	37.9		—	—
1986	42.9	+13.2	—	—
1987	42.8	–0.2	—	—
1988	43.5	+1.6	—	—
1989	45.1	+3.7	—	—
1990	48.1	+6.7	—	—
1991	56.1	+17.7	12.0	—
1992	57.0	+1.6	25.0	+108.3
1993	50.7	–11.1	19.2	–23.2

Winter Feed Costs

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will estimate the value of winter feed costs for hill farmers for each year since 1990; and what was the increase or decrease on the previous years.

Sir Hector Monro: It is not possible to identify winter feed costs but the value of total feed costs for livestock farmers in the Scottish less-favoured areas is set out in the following table:

	Total Feed Cost (£ per farm)	Change from previous year Total (£ per farm)	Percentage
1990–91	9,472	–52	– 1 per cent.
1991–92	9,788	+487	+5 per cent.
1992–93	10,883	+1,106	+11 per cent.
1993–94 (forecast)	11,775	+892	+8 per cent.

Source:
Scottish farm accounts scheme.

The sample of farms in the Scottish farm accounts scheme varies slightly from year to year. The total cost figures relate to the sample employed in the year in question. The change figures reflect the change from the previous year for an identical sample of farms.

Cow Subsidies

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his estimate of the current value of (a) hill cow subsidy and (b) suckler cow subsidy in (i) total and (ii) per head figures; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro: The current main rates of hill livestock compensatory allowances for cows in the severely disadvantaged areas is £47.50 and £23.75 in the disadvantaged areas. Expenditure on cows under the 1993 HLCA scheme was £30.2 million. The current suckler cow premium is £87.49 with a further £27.63 per cow payable to producers who qualify for an extensification premium. Expenditure under the 1993 suckler cow premium scheme was £43.5 million.

Health Authorities and Trusts

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the number of health authorities and trusts as at 30 September.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: On 30 September 1994 there were 15 health boards and 39 NHS trusts in Scotland.

Mr. Galbraith: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will give, for each health board and trust, the number of houses on their property which are privately owned.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information requested is not collected centrally.

Life Prisoners

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners in Scottish prisons are serving discretionary life sentences; and how many are still in prison after serving more than 10 years.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: A total of 24 individuals are serving discretionary life sentences in Scottish prisons, seven of whom have spent more than 10 years in custody.

Saughton Prison

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the membership of the preliminary review committee of Saughton prison in Edinburgh; and what overlap there is in the membership of that committee with those taking day to day responsibility for prisoners.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: No individual prison has a preliminary review committee. The preliminary review committee for life sentence prisoners is chaired by a senior Scottish Office official and its membership comprises a High Court judge, the chairman and a psychiatrist member of the Parole Board for Scotland and the deputy chief executive of the Scottish Prison Service. None of these is involved in day-to-day management of prisoners.

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners in Saughton prison, Edinburgh, were not told of their right to make written representations to the preliminary review committee.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The information is not available.

Prisoners

Mr. Worthington: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland how many prisoners in Scottish prisons have served more than 12 years of their current sentence.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton: The subject of the question relates to matters undertaken by the Scottish Prison Service. I have asked its chief executive, Mr. E. W. Frizzell, to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from E. W. Frizzell to Mr. Tony Worthington, dated 1 December 1994:

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton has asked me to reply to your Question about the number of prisoners who have served more than 12 years of their current sentence.

There are currently 131 life sentence prisoners who have spent 12 years or more in custody. This information is not collected centrally in respect of determinate prisoners. However, with the introduction of the Scottish Prison Information Network (SPIN) next year, this type of information will be available.

Waiting Times

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list waiting times for patients of Aberdeen Royal Hospital NHS trust for each of the main medical specialities for the current year, for 1993 and 1992.

Mr. Lang: Information on waiting times for first out-patient appointments at trust level was not held centrally until 1994. The table shows the waiting times for patients treated as in-patients or day cases in selected specialties at the trust in 1992, 1993 and 1994 and the waiting times for first out-patient appointments in 1994. All 1994 figures are from 1 January to 30 September and are provisional.

Beef Exports

Mr. Malcolm Bruce: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he has met European Commission officials to discuss amendments to Decision 94/474; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Hector Monro [holding answer 25 November 1994]: On 12 October the Scientific Veterinary Committee reviewed the six-year rule applying to the export of meat from young cattle and agreed that it should be removed. We are now pressing the Commission to bring forward a decision on this quickly.

Medical Staff

Mr. Robert Hughes: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the medical staff complements in each of the main specialities, the numbers in post, the vacancies and the length of time that vacancies have been unfilled.

Mr. Lang: The only grade of hospital doctor for which a central establishment is set is senior registrar. The establishment for the main specialities for 1994 and the numbers of posts filled at 30 September 1993, the latest date for which the information is available, are as follows:

Main specialties	Establishment		Number in post
All specialties	473	(455)	424
Accident and emergency	11	(10)	7
Anaesthetics	55	(50)	51
Clinical laboratory specialties	54	(60)	59
Medical specialties	125	(117)	108
Obstetrics and gynaecology	24	(24)	23

Psychiatric specialties	71	(68)	61
Radiology	31	(30)	28
Surgical specialties	99	(93)	86
Other specialties	1	(1)	0

The 1993 establishment of hospital medical posts is given in brackets.

The establishment of public health medicine which covers both the senior registrar and the registrar grades is 33 posts. At 30 September 1993, there were 34 doctors in the two grades.

No senior registrar posts were reported as having been vacant for six months or more in the year ended 30 September 1993. Information is not collected centrally on posts vacant for less than six months.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Mr. Lang: The information requested is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Clydebank and Milngavie (Mr. Worthington) on 10 May 1994 at column 94, which provides information about payment performance.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Lang: My Department has employed two full-time special advisers over the last five years, although only one, Mr. Gregor Mackay, is in post at present.

Of the previous special advisers to my Department, Mr. Graeme Carter was appointed on 7 August 1987 and re-appointed on 28 November 1990. He resigned on 31 December 1990. Mr Alan Young was first appointed on 22 December 1989 and was subsequently re-appointed twice—on 29 November 1989 and 8 May 1992. He resigned on 2 November 1994.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special adviser's salary spine of 34 points, which starts at £19,503. Appointments are non-pensionable and the salary spine reflects this.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Domestic Violence

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make it his policy to institute a new strategy to combat domestic violence; and what discussions he has had with the Secretary of State for Education and the Lord Chancellor on this subject.

Mr. Maclean: In their reply to the 1993 Home Affairs Select Committee report on domestic violence, the Government made it clear that domestic violence must be tackled vigorously. Action is being taken to ensure that perpetrators are brought to justice; that victims and their children receive the necessary practical and emotional support and that preventive strategies to help reduce violence and suffering are identified and promoted. The aim of the Government's public awareness campaign on domestic violence, which was launched on 24 October, is to send a clear message that domestic violence is a crime and no one should stand for it.

The Department for Education and the Lord Chancellor's Department are represented on the ministerial group on domestic violence.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many incidents of domestic violence were recorded in the latest year for which figures are available.

Mr. Maclean: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Mossley Hill (Mr. Alton) on 26 October, Official Report, columns 638–39.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from the receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. In its 1995 annual report, the Home Office expects to report payment performance in excess of 90 per cent. in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Juvenile Offenders

Mr. Byers : To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the total cost of the research project carried out by the Policy Studies Institute into persistent juvenile offenders; what definition they used; what areas of the United Kingdom were covered by the study; what conclusions and recommendations were made; and what response his Department has made to the study.

Mr. Maclean: The scope and nature of the research, and the findings, are set out in the published report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. The research cost approximately £68,000. The report has helped to inform Government policy on juvenile crime.

Stop and Search Statistics

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people were stopped and searched in each police authority in each quarter since 1990; for what reasons these searches were carried out; in how many cases an arrest was made; and if he will provide an ethnic breakdown of those stopped and searched.

Mr. Maclean: The readily available information is published in Home Office statistical bulletin "Operation of certain police powers under PACE, England and Wales 1993"—issue 15/94—table 1, a copy of which can be found in the Library. The bulletin references for earlier years are 14/91, 15/92, and 21/93.

Quarterly data in the form requested would be available only at disproportionate cost.

The available statistics on ethnic breakdown of those stopped and searched relate to the fiscal year 1993–94 and are given in the table. The data should be treated with caution. This is the first time that this information has been collected. Two forces could not provide the data and a further five forces had to provide an estimate.

Mr. Bernie Grant: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if information relating to stop and search incidents where no arrest is made is stored on police computers.

Mr. Maclean: A written record must be made of all stop and searches by police officers whether or not an arrest is made. The method of retention of such records is a matter for the chief officer of the force concerned.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Howard: The information is as follows:

Year	Names
1990	Mr. M. Simmonds	23 October 1989—July 1990
	Mr. J. Taylor	19 February 1990—November 1990
	Mr. A. Kerpel	1 December 1990—10 April 1992

1994	Mr. P. Rock	(see above)
	Mr. D. Cameron	(see above)
	Miss R. Whetstone	5 September 1994—to date

I regret that, in the reply I gave on 20 July 1994, Official Report, columns 274–75, to an earlier question from the hon. Member, I said that only one special adviser joined the Department in 1990.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, currently ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Police Authorities (Funding)

Mr. Shersby: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to announce the allocations of police grant for individual police authorities in 1995–96; and what are the implications of this for the overall funding of police authorities in that year.

Mr. Howard: I have today put a copy of my proposals for the allocation of police grant for 1995–96 in the Library.

Proposals are also being announced today by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment for police standard spending assessments and special grants in England and by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales for police standard spending assessments in Wales.

The table below shows by police force area the total effect of all these proposals for 1995–96.

Police Officers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women from an ethnic minority background are police officers in England and Wales.

Mr. Maclean: As of 31 August 1994, the latest date for which this information is readily available, there were 1,590 men and 438 women from an ethnic minority background serving as police officers in England and Wales.

Metropolitan Police

Mr. Spearing: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps are being taken by the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to contract out operational support services of the Metropolitan police; and what conditions are being placed on the contractors concerning their employees.

Mr. Maclean: Police forces do not contract out operational police duties. Support functions, however, may be suitable for contracting out. The Commissioner informs me that the Metropolitan police contracted out catering, cleaning, security guarding, building maintenance, vehicle repair and other support services to the value of more than £100 million in 1993–94.

The Metropolitan police has an extensive programme of market testing. Work valued at more than £110 million a year is being examined to see if greater value for money could be achieved if all or part of this work were undertaken by the private sector.

In certain cases, contractors are required to meet special security conditions.

Remand

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the number of people on remand (a) untried, (b) convicted unsentenced and (c) in total at the end of each month in 1994.

Mr. Maclean: Information on remand data for 1994 will not be available until autumn 1995.

Remands data include estimates for a number of police forces where data are of a questionable quality. It is not appropriate, for this reason, to give a monthly breakdown of remand figures.

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the average cost of custody per inmate per month for those on remand in custody.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 1 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the average monthly cost of custody for prisoners on remand.

In 1993–94 the average monthly cost per prisoner place was £1,893. This excludes exceptional items—the costs of holding prisoners in police cells and compensation for abandonment of plans to relocate the Prison Service headquarters to Derby.

It is not possible to distinguish the cost of keeping different types of offenders in custody.

Truncheons

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish in full the results of tests made to assess the alternatives to the traditional truncheon for use by the police in London.

Mr. Maclean: A report of the scientific evaluation of the alternative batons which have been approved for the Metropolitan police has been sent to the Association of Chief Police Officers, and a copy has been placed in the Library of the House.

Policing Costs

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assessment he has made of the cost to police authorities in England of dealing with demands of (a) the Crown Prosecution Service, (b) the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 and (c) traffic management schemes.

Mr. Maclean: There has been no central assessment of the overall cost to police authorities of dealing with any of these areas.

Prisoners (Police Cells)

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoner nights have been spent in police cells in each month of 1994 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 1 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of prisoner nights spent in police cells in each month of 1994 to date.

The latest information, up to and including 27 November, is given below:

Mr. Straw: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost to his Department of keeping prisoners in police cells, broken down by police authority in 1994 to date.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewes to Mr. Jack Straw, dated 1 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the cost of keeping prisoners in police cells, broken down by police authority.

The following table gives police cell costs for each police authority for 1 January 1994–30 November 1994.

Police Authority	Amount £
Cumbria	13,385.44
Greater Manchester	7,937,323.17

The above amounts exclude invoices not yet submitted.

Police Houses

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police houses there are in each police authority; and how many are empty.

Mr. Maclean: The information is set out in the table.

Immigration Applicants

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many occasions in the last year the immigration service has failed to meet its target that no applicant for entry into the United Kingdom should spend more than 24 hours in a police cell; what was the length of time individuals were so incarcerated in such cases; and when he expects the target to be met.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: Information about periods of detention in police cells is not held centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Plans to provide additional immigration detention accommodation over the next 18 months should assist in reducing the time spent in police cells.

Spitalfields Market Constabulary

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the authority for the operation of Spitalfields Market constabulary; who controls them; what is their relationship with (a) the Metropolitan police and (b) the City of London police; what is the involvement of the Home Office in their work; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: Responsibility for Spitalfields Market constabulary rests with the Corporation of the City of London.

Police Car Maintenance Units

Mr. Chidgey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a summary of the financial findings from the study his Department conducted in 1988 into the proposed privatisation of police car maintenance units.

Mr. Maclean: No such study has ever been undertaken by the Home Office. The Audit Commission published a study in May 1989, however, entitled "Improving Vehicle Fleet Management in the Police Service"—police papers number 3—which made a number of recommendations aimed at reducing the repair and maintenance costs of police vehicles. It did not consider the question of privatisation.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Howard: My Department's press notices are passed to the Central Office of Information, through which they are made generally available to users of Internet. We are considering using Internet to provide other public information.

Mr. Stephen Smith

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action has been taken to date over the allegations made by Mr. Stephen Smith that he suffered medical negligence while an inmate at Doncaster prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewis to Mr. Martin Redmond, dated 1 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the case of Stephen Smith.

Mr. Smith received medical attention at Doncaster prison and was subsequently referred to Doncaster Royal Infirmary for further treatment. Whilst receiving treatment for his condition in Doncaster it is recorded that he refused to follow medical advice.

Private Security Companies

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list (a) by month for the last 48 months, the private security companies that his Department has employed that are not registered with either of the industry's watchdog bodies and (b) those companies currently employed by his Department; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: During the period specified, the Home Office has let contracts to the following private security companies which are not registered with either the British Security Industry Association or the International Professional Trade Association:

Contractor	Contract duration
COEX Limited	February 1991–September 1992
Grundig International Limited	July 1992–December 1992
Johnson Control Systems Limited	February 1992–March 1994
Knogo UK Limited	December 1991–June 1992
3 DIS (Europe)	March 1994–March 1994

The Home Office currently employs the following private security companies which are not registered with either the British Security Industry Association or the International Professional Trade Association:

Contractor

Airline Security Consultants Limited

Aviation Defence International

Defence Security Services

Insight Consulting

Security Wales Limited

A number of factors are considered when awarding contracts, which may include certification of compliance with relevant British standards and membership of an established trade association.

Prison Escapes

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many (a) men and (b) women who were serving a prison sentence have escaped and are still at large; and on what dates and in what circumstances they absconded.

Mr. Michael Forsyth: Responsibility for this matter has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewes to Mr. Tom Cox, dated 1 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Question about the number of sentenced prisoners who have escaped and who are still at large.

Of the sentenced population, 67 male and two female prisoners are still at large. A table showing the dated and circumstance of each escape is enclosed, a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House.

Many of the escapes have been through a breach of the perimeter of category C prison. We are part way through a major programme to upgrade the perimeter fences of such prisons which will make escape significantly more difficult.

A substantial proportion of escapes in the past have also been from escort. As a result of a range of initiatives, the number of escapes from escort is falling. If current trends continue, such escapes will be over 50 per cent. lower in 1994–95 than in 1992–93.

Prisoner Transfers

Mr. Cox: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the policy of his Department as to the transfer of prison inmates from prisons in England and Wales to prisons in other areas of the United Kingdom and overseas; and when this policy was last reviewed.

Mr. Howard: The Criminal Justice Act 1961 provides for prisoners, on request, to be transferred between United Kingdom jurisdictions and the Channel Islands, either permanently or temporarily. Requests are considered on an individual basis under criteria announced to Parliament on 23 November 1992, Official Report, columns 481–82.

The Repatriation of Prisoners Act 1984 enables the United Kingdom to enter into international agreements for the repatriation of prisoners. Along with 27 other countries, the United Kingdom has ratified the Council of Europe convention on the transfer of sentenced persons. In addition, we have been joined in the Commonwealth repatriation scheme by five countries and bi-lateral agreement has been concluded with Thailand.

These arrangements are kept under constant review.

Home Leave

Mr. George Howarth: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many prisoners who were granted home leave were still at large having failed to return at the latest date for which figures are available;

(2) how many prisoners (a) applied for home leave and (b) were granted home leave in each of the first six months of 1994;

(3) how many prisoners who were granted home leave during (a) 1992, (b) 1993 and (c) the first six months of 1994 were subsequently (i) charged and (ii) convicted of an offence while on home leave;

(4) how many prisoners who had been refused parole during the last 12 months were granted home leave within the next 56 days.

Mr. Michael Forsyth [holding answers 21 November 1994]: Responsibility for these matters has been delegated to the Director General of the Prison Service, who has been asked to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from Derek Lewes to Mr. George Howarth, dated 1 December 1994:

The Home Secretary has asked me to reply to your recent Questions about home leave for prisoners.

I regret that the statistical information you have requested is either not collated centrally or is not held within the Prison Service and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost.

Following the review of home leave and temporary release we are establishing a system to monitor release on temporary licence and the impact of the new arrangements. The system will provide a more comprehensive picture than is currently available, although it will not be capable of answering all of your questions.

Ethnic Minority Funding

Mr. MacShane: To ask he Secretary of State for the Home Department if it is his policy that the assistance provided currently under section 11 grant posts to Rotherham ethnic minority children who need help with English will be maintained under the single regeneration budget process.

Mr. Curry: I have been asked to reply.

The single regeneration budget has a range of objectives, including enhancing the employment prospects, education and skills of local people, particularly the young and those at a disadvantage, and promoting equality of opportunity. It is also intended to promote initiatives of benefit to ethnic minorities. In line with these objectives, on-going commitments under section 11, part of which has been absorbed within the SRB from 1 April 1994, will continue to be honoured. In addition, the SRB will be able to provide support for new education and other projects aimed at ethnic minority communities through the bidding arrangements introduced for 1995–96 and later years.

Rotherham is also eligible to bid for section 11 resources under the terms of a circular issued by the Home Office on 7 September. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary announced on 22 November that section 11 funding for the current bidding round is to be doubled from £15 million to £30 million, and that the deadline for applications for funding is to be extended to 30 December 1994.

Private Security Services

Mr. William O' Brien: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met representatives from private security services to discuss their role in respect of policing of streets; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Maclean: No Home Office Ministers have ever met the private security industry specifically to discuss street patrolling. Policing of our streets is a matter for the police service.

EDUCATION

Grant-maintained Schools

Mr. Andrew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list all grant-maintained schools, with their DFE reference numbers by local education authority area, in separate lists for primary, secondary and special schools, with voluntary schools separately identified by denomination; if she will give for each school (i) the actual expenditure for the year 1993–94 and (ii) the allocations made for the year 1994–95 together with, in each case, the number of pupils used for calculations, the transitional grant awarded, the direct annual maintenance grant, the AMG central costs allocation, the AMG meal subsidies, the AMG carry-forward from the previous financial year, the special-purpose grant for curriculum and staff-development grant, the special-purpose grant for VAT and rate-relief grant, the special-purpose grant for premises insurance grant, the special-purpose grant for staff-restructuring grant, the capital grant for formula allocation, the capital grant for named projects, other grants from public funds, the total of above grants for each school (1) excluding and (2) including capital grants for named projects, the total of the above for each school excluding capital grants expressed per head of school population, the total of the above for each school including capital grants expressed per head of school population, and the total for each of primary, secondary and special grant-maintained schools; and if, in respect of each school, she will list its standard 'A' number multiplied by number of year groups and capacity according to open enrolment calculation.

Mr. Robin Squire: Matters concerning the determination and payment of grant to grant-maintained schools are now the responsibility of the Funding Agency for Schools. It also holds grant information relating to last year. I have asked the chairman of the funding agency to write to the hon. Member.

The remaining information requested is being collated. I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as it is ready.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) how many of the bills paid by her Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in her Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Forth: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. The Department will be providing details of its annual payment performance in its departmental report. For the invoices submitted to central accounts in October, 94.7 per cent. had been paid within one month of receipt, 99.0 per cent. within two months, 99.7 per cent. within three months and 99.8 per cent within six months.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Byers: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what amounts have been requested by way of capital spending in 1995–96 by each local education authority; and what has been the total amount requested in England.

Mr. Robin Squire: The information requested is set out in the following table:

Higher Education Funding Council

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what percentage of the Higher Education Funding Council for England's teaching allocations was set aside in 1993–94 to compensate for the change in the balance between core and tuition fees; and what was the total sum allocated for compensation and the total funds allocated for research;

(2) how many institutions received marginal funding for teaching above £300,000 from the Higher Education Funding Council for England in 1993–94 and 1994–95; and what was the amount of money allocated in each case;

(3) what proportion of Higher Education Funding Council for England research funds in 1993–94 and 1994–95 was employed in the category of development research, supporting technical development of new forms of teaching and learning; which of the old universities received allocations in this category and what was the maximum and minimum allocation made to any institution in this category;

(4) in which separate categories of the allocations itemised by the Higher Education Funding Council for England in 1993–94 and 1994–95 the sums distributed by the council amounted to less than 1 per cent. of the total;

(5) if she will list the amounts allocated for research to the 10 institutions receiving least in research funds from the Higher Education Funding Council for England in 1993–94 and 1994–95;

(6) how many institutions received research funds from the Higher Education Funding Council for England (a) above £20 million, (b) less than £20 million but above £1 million, (c) less than £1 million but greater than zero or (d) zero research funds for 1993–94 and 1994–95;

(7) what was the maximum total research allocation by the Higher Education Funding Council for England to any single institution in 1993–94 and 1994–95.

(8) if she will list separately the funds provided by the Higher Education Funding Council for England for teaching and for research for (a) the Open University, (b) the old universities, (c) the former polytechnics and (d) colleges for 1993–94 and 1994–95.

Mr. Boswell: The figures requested are published in the Higher Education Funding Council for England's circulars 35/93 and 31/94, copies of which are available in the Library.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what mechanisms the Higher Education Funding Council for England uses to identify best practice in teaching; and what financial incentives are used to encourage it.

Mr. Boswell: The Higher Education Funding Council for England recruits appropriate academics to undertake quality assessments of teaching and learning in specific subjects at higher education institutions. An unsatisfactory assessment risks the withdrawal of funds unless corrected during a specified period. Reports of individual assessments are published and, as the assessments for each subject area are completed, an overview report for the whole subject area is published. This peer review identifies best practice and reports on it in the detailed assessment and overview reports.

The HEFCE, jointly with the other funding councils and the Department of Education for Northern Ireland, also supports a teaching and learning technology programme which aims to promote best practice, flexibility and efficiency in teaching within higher education through the greater use of new technology.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education whether she has carried out a review into the effectiveness of the funding methodology applied by the Higher Education Funding Council for England in achieving the objectives given to the council by the Government; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The effectiveness of funding policy, including the funding methodology of the Higher Education Funding Council for England, in achieving the Government's objectives for higher education is kept under constant review.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the maximum and minimum full-time undergraduate average unit of Higher Education Funding Council for England funding by academic subject category for 1993–94 and 1994–95; and which institutions received these figures in each case.

Mr. Boswell: Details of the average units of council funding for 1993–94 are published in the Higher Education Funding Council for England's report 1/94, a copy of which is available in the Library. Details for 1994–95 are not yet available.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what evidence she has received on trends in teaching costs in higher education institutions; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: The higher education sector has achieved significant reductions in unit costs in recent years. Up to 1993–94, the scale of the productivity gains in terms of unit public funding exceeded those planned by the Government as a result of institutions' decisions to recruit at above the level of the Government's plans.

Mr. Don Foster: To ask the Secretary of State for Education (1) what mechanisms exist to ensure that funds allocated by the Higher Education Funding Council for England for research are not used for other purposes;

(2) what measures are in place to ensure that the expenditure in institutions funded by the Higher Education Funding Council for England reflects the allocations made by the Higher Education Funding Council for England relating to research and teaching.

Mr. Boswell: The majority of recurrent funding from the Higher Education Funding Council for England is provided in the form of a block grant. Higher education institutions, being autonomous, are free to deploy the grant to meet their own needs and priorities, subject to the terms of their financial memoranda with the HEFCE.

The HEFCE has asked institutions to account annually for their allocation of research funds to individual departments, though not to account for how those funds are spent. This will enable higher education institutions to plan their research better and provide improved public accountability.

League Tables

Mr. Morgan: To ask the Secretary of State for Education what proposals she has for the supply of information to local authorities by grant-maintained schools for the purpose of drawing up value-added school league tables.

Mr. Forth: The report of the School Curriculum and Assessment Authority on the development of value added by schools will be published shortly. The implications for the collection and aggregation of data to permit the inclusion of value-added measures in school performance tables will need to be considered against the various options for comparing pupils' actual achievements at different ages. Whatever approach is adopted will need to produce measures which are straightforward to calculate and intelligible to parents.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will list the special advisers employed by her Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Forth: Five special advisers have been employed by the Department in the last five years: Eleanor Laing, Tessa Keswick, David Ruffley, Clifford Grantham, and, most recently, Dr. Elizabeth Cottrell.

Information on special advisers is not retained in the Department once they leave, and dates of joining and leaving are not therefore available.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special advisers' salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Students (Financial Support)

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for Education if she will give details of the support that will be available to students through mandatory awards and student loans in the academic year 1995–96.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: I have today laid before Parliament the Education (Mandatory Awards) Regulations 1994 and, together with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland, the Education (Student Loans) Regulations 1994.

These regulations provide for new rates of grant and loan for the academic year 1995–96 and for the various changes I announced on 29 November, Official Report, columns 675–80. The total level of support available to students through the main rates of grant and loan together in 1995–96 will be 2.5 per cent. higher than for 1994–95 in line with forecast price increases. I am placing a memorandum in the Library giving full details of the new rates.

Specialist Institutions

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Education in what circumstances it is the responsibility (a) of local education authorities to buy placements at independent specialist institutions for young people aged 16 to 19 years who have a statement and (b) of the Further Education Funding Council for buying placements if there is not a statement and if the college is educationally appropriate; if Doncaster college for the deaf is classed as educationally appropriate; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Boswell: Under the Education Act 1993, LEAs have a duty, in consultation with the parents, to determine the special education provision required for young people for whom they are responsible. Where an LEA maintains a statement, it must also arrange for the special educational provision specified in the statement. LEAs have a statutory duty to pay for the provision at an independent institution specified in a statement when it is further education provided at a school catering for under-16s as well as over-16s.

In circumstances where there is no LEA duty to fund provision, it falls upon the Further Education Funding Council to do so in respect of students over compulsory school age and under 25 years of age who have learning difficulties and disabilities. Where the council has satisfied itself that suitable provision is not available in the further and higher education sectors and judges that it is in the students' best interests to do so, it has a duty to buy provision outside these sectors.

The Further Education Funding Council has confirmed that it will continue to fund places for students with learning difficulties and disabilities at Doncaster college for the deaf in cases which meet the council's published criteria for such placements.

Christmas Expenditure

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how much public money will be spent on entertaining, Christmas decorations and other festive activities this Christmas season by her Department and Government agencies answerable to her Department; and of this sum how much will be spent in Ministers' private offices and official residences.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: This information is not available as it is not possible to disaggregate costs of this nature from the Department's running cost expenditure, details of which are published in the annual departmental report [CM 2510].

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Education how many official Christmas cards she and her Ministers intend to send in 1994; how much these cards will cost (a) to buy, (b) to post and (c) in staff time to sign, address and place in envelopes; and if she will place in the Library a sample copy of the official Christmas card she intends to send this year.

Mrs. Gillian Shephard: My Ministers and I intend to send about 950 official Christmas cards in 1994. They will cost some £800 to purchase and £180 to post. Information on the cost in staff time to address cards and place them in envelopes is not available. When my cards are available, I will place copies in the Libraries of the House.

EMPLOYMENT

Labour Statistics

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to his answer of 24 November, Official Report, column 266, if he will provide a regional breakdown of the spring 1994 labour force survey figure to identify separately the numbers of employed and self-employed people in part-time work who could not find full-time work, by percentage, gender and age.

Part-time Workers

Mr. McCartney: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will provide the latest estimate of the number of employees who are in temporary part-time work because they have been unable to find full-time permanent employment, broken down by region, gender and age.

Mr. Oppenheim: The following table gives the information available from the spring 1994 labour force survey. The sample size used for the survey is not large enough to provide reliable estimates for regions.

Merchant Seafarers

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the provisions of current employment legislation which do not apply to United Kingdom merchant seafarers.

Mr. Oppenheim: Provisions which exclude seafarers of various descriptions in some circumstances from certain of the provisions of general employment legislation include:

Section 10 of the Sex Discrimination Act 1975;

Sections 8 and 9 of the Race Relations Act 1976;

Sections 141 and 144 of the Employment Protection (Consolidation) Act 1978;

Section 30 of the Wages Act 1986;

Sections 284 and 285 of the Trade Union and Labour Relations (Consolidation) Act 1992.

Training

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how much training was provided by each training and enterprise council in Greater London in respect of (a) employment training, (b) youth training and (c) other programmes in the last year for which figures are available; and if he will show the proportions of each that were provided by further education colleges.

Mr. Paice: Training figures information by training and enterprise councils in Greater London is set out in the following table. Information on training provided by further education colleges is not available in the form requested.

Training Schemes (Wales)

Mr. Ron Davies: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of those referred to employment training in Wales by his Department did not arrive; and what percentage of those in Wales who started a scheme completed their training in the last year for which figures are available.

Mr. Redwood: I have been asked to reply.

Some 53.5 per cent. of those referred by the Employment Service to employment training in Wales did not arrive for their training in 1993–94. The ET national follow-up survey show that from April 1992 to March 1993, 58 per cent. of those on employment training completed agreed training.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Miss Widdecombe: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

However, Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. Recent figures for 1994 indicate that the Employment Department, the Employment Service and the Health and Safety Executive paid, respectively, 96.3, 83.4 and 90.3 per cent. of their bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual condition existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Miss Widdecombe: The following special advisers have been employed by the Employment Department, in the last five years:

Alison Broom: from 21 July 1994 to date

Michael McManus: from 28 May 1993 to 20 July 1994

Dr. Elizabeth Cottrell: from 14 April 1992 to 27 May 1993

Iain Wilton: from 13 January 1992 to 13 March 1992

Tim Collins: from 1 February 1990 to 10 January 1992

Warwick Lightfoot: from 2 November 1987 to 31 August 1989.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are however, normally paid on a special advisers salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19.503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary spine reflects this.

Jobseekers

Ms Lynne: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what will be the cost to the Benefits Agency of the jobseeker's agreement per individual with whom it is negotiated.

Miss Widdecombe: This matter is still under consideration.

ENVIRONMENT

Business Start-up

Mr. MacShane: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if it is his policy that support for business start-up in Rotherham and similar schemes will be maintained in the single regeneration budget process.

Mr. Curry: The single regeneration budget has a range of objectives, including the encouragement of sustainable economic growth and wealth creation by improving the competitiveness of the local economy, including business support. On-going commitments under the business start-up scheme, which has been absorbed within the SRB from 1 April 1994, will continue to be honoured. In addition, the SRB will be able to provide support for new and existing businesses through the bidding arrangements introduced for 1995–96 and later years.

Pit Data

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to make provision for the recording by experts of all relevant data in respect of the workings of (a) shafts, (b) drainage channels and (c) other elements of industrial archaeology which are found at pits being turned into opencast workings; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Paul Beresford: No; PPG16 "Archaeology and Planning" already gives general guidance on the handling of archaeological remains and discoveries under the development plan and control systems, including the steps that should be taken for their preservation or recording. In addition, MPG12 requires local planning authorities to identify, where possible, the location of mine entries and openings in surveys of their areas.

Quarrying

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received, and what assessment his Department has made, of the impact of the proposed new planning guidelines on quarrying for aggregates upon environmentally important and sensitive sites.

Sir Paul Beresford: In drawing up the new planning guidelines contained in minerals planning guidance "Guidelines for Aggregates Provision in England", MPG6, the department consulted a wide range of interested bodies including those concerned about the impact of quarrying in environmentally important and sensitive areas. The responses from those bodies were taken into account and we have had no specific representations since the guidelines were published in April this year.

The guidelines are designed to ensure that the construction industry receives an adequate and steady supply of material at the best balance of social, environmental and economic cost. The environmental impacts of particular proposals are given due consideration during the processing of the planning application.

Departmental Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the average and the median time his Department has taken to pay suppliers in each of the last 12 months; and what proportion of bills took more than six weeks to pay.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993, my Department paid 90 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will estimate the effect on rate bills in the northern region of the 1995 property revaluation on each category of property divided between small and large, assuming no change in real terms rate poundage and (a) with and (b) without the effect of transitional relief, on the basis of his answer of 1 November to the hon. Member for Coventry, South-West (Mr. Butcher), Official Report, columns 1003–6.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information about properties in the northern region is contained in the table below and takes account of the most recent information available. The effects of the 1995 revaluation taking account of the transitional arrangements are calculated on the basis of the limits on increases and decreases in rate bills announced by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in his answer of 29 November to my hon. Friend the Member for Harborough (Mr.

Garnier), Official Report, columns 649–50. The effects, taking no account of transitional relief, are shown in parentheses.

Percentage changes in rate bills for the northern region following the 1995 revaluation.

Northern Region: percentage change

Other	+7 (+36)	+7 (+19)	+7 (+21)
Total	+8(+42)	+8 (+29)	+8 (+31)

[1] Small properties have a 1 April 1995 rateable value of less than £10,000.

Nuclear Waste

Mr. Cousins: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the landfill sites in the counties of Northumberland, Tyne and Wear, Cleveland and Durham where the controlled burial of low-level nuclear waste is licensed; and, in each case, what is the ceiling on the amounts involved.

Mr. Atkins: The following four sites, High Urpeth, Kibblesworth, Ryton and Cowpen Bewley, have in the past received low-level radioactive waste for disposal by controlled burial. The first three mentioned are now closed, leaving Cowpen Bewley as the only site which may receive such waste.

This site may receive waste from a small number of locally based organisations. Authority to make controlled burials is granted only after an assessment of the waste producer's application and of the site it proposes to use. The certificates of authorisation issued to those organisations, which now use Cowpen Bewley, contain detailed limits on both volume and activity of waste which may be disposed of, and on the disposal conditions. These authorisations permit the disposal of no more than 200 MBq of radium and thorium and of 2 GBq of other radionuclides, which are not alpha emitters, each month at Cowpen Bewley.

County Archives

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he is taking to prevent the deterioration of written records in county archives; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: All principal local authorities have a duty under the Local Government Act 1972 to make proper arrangements for any documents in their custody. Responsibility for the care of county archives therefore lies with the county councils and any successor authorities. A working group has, however, been established for the purpose of drawing up and promulgating central guidance for the future of archive collections, with particular reference to the needs of any new authorities established as a consequence of local government reorganisation. Its members are drawn from the Public Record Office, the Society of Archivists, the Royal Commission on Historical Manuscripts and the Association of County Archivists as well as representatives of my Department and the Department of National Heritage. It is intended to have the guidance in place early next year.

CITES

Mr. Patnick: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the outcome of the ninth conference of the parties of CITES.

Sir Paul Beresford: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Environment and Countryside to the hon. Members for Ceredigion and Pembroke, North (Mr. Dafis) and for Newham North-West (Mr. Banks) on 24 November, Official Report, columns 241–42.

Rural Challenge Competition

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will set out the basic features of the successful bids to the Rural Development Commission which enabled them to win the rural challenge competition.

Mr. Atkins: I launched rural challenge on 14 February 1994. Detailed bidding guidance was issued on 29 March. In judging the 17 finalists, the panel gave particular priority to bids which involved partnerships drawn from the private, public and voluntary sectors and the local community; demonstrated innovative approaches which could be replicated more widely; respected and enhanced the environment and promoted good design; levered in a high proportion of private sector investment; and offered good value for money. The six winners which Lord Shuttleworth and I announced on 24 November clearly demonstrated those features.

Local Authority Housing

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if a homeless family in a temporary tenancy and who are on the local authority housing list will have to accept any property of a suitable size for which they would be eligible under the proposals contained in the statement on access to local authority housing.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Any applicant for local authority or housing association housing could decline to take up a tenancy offered to him through the housing waiting list. As now, it would be for local authorities to decide whether refusal of such an offer would affect the applicant's eligibility for further offers.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has to bring forward legislation based on the statement on access to local authority housing.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Newham, North-East (Mr. Timms) on 28 November, Official Report, column 479.

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the position of a homeless family granted a temporary tenancy who became eligible for a permanent local authority tenancy while they were temporary tenants following implementation of the proposals contained in his statement on access to local authority housing.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: As the then Minister for Housing, Inner Cities and Construction, my right hon. Friend the Member for Ealing, Action (Sir G. Young) said in his statement to the House on 18 July, Official Report, columns 21–23, in most parts of the country a 12-month period on the housing waiting list will be long enough for someone with real housing needs to obtain a local authority or housing association tenancy.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Sir Paul Beresford: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993, my Department paid 90 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Waste Shipments

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on his Department's policy concerning trans-border shipment of toxic and hazardous waste from (a) developed and (b) other countries.

Mr. Atkins: I welcome this opportunity to reiterate the Government's policy, outlined earlier this year, when a new control regime on waste shipments was introduced.

The EC waste shipments regulation and the United Kingdom's associated Transfrontier Shipment of Waste Regulations 1994 came into effect on 6 May. This legislation enabled the United Kingdom to fulfil its obligations under the Basel convention, to which the United Kingdom became a party on 8 May.

These obligations are based on the principle of national self-sufficiency in waste disposal. This principle is the means by which countries can be encouraged to take responsibility for disposing of the wastes they generate. Thereby they are encouraged to minimise wastes—especially hazardous wastes—and to reuse and recycle, and to pursue policies of sustainable development.

We must also have regard for other environmental responsibilities arising from our membership of the European Union and the global community. In implementing the Basel convention, we should not lose sight of these wider considerations.

As a developed country, with ample disposal facilities to meet our waste arisings, we will have no need to export wastes for final disposal in other countries. The EC regulation prohibits such exports to countries outside the EC and EFTA. We shall go further by proposing a complete prohibition on such exports to all countries.

There is no equivalent case for a general ban on exports of wastes for recovery, but special considerations apply to the export of hazardous wastes for recovery in developing countries and countries in transition. At the second conference of the Basel convention in March, it was recognised that there is a high risk that such exports will not be managed in environmentally sound ways in the country of receipt. It was decided that, except in exceptional circumstances, trans-boundary movement of hazardous wastes from OECD to non-OECD states for the purposes of recovery should be prohibited. In the Government's opinion this decision has now taken effect.

Our policy towards imports is based on similar principles. In future, the presumption will be that wastes should not be imported for final disposal in this country. This applies both to landfill, either directly and indirectly, and to incineration without energy recovery, and also to disposal under the guise of recovery—so called "sham recovery". However, imports for genuine recovery operations will continue to be allowed.

For most other wastes, all other countries should now develop final disposal facilities and there seems no reason to delay a prohibition on imports. There may, however, be special circumstances where imports for specialist disposal processes—and in particular for high temperature incineration—might be justified on wider environmental grounds for very limited periods and quantities. This would apply on a transitional and reducing basis where a country had not yet completed specialist disposal capacity or was dealing with a backlog inherited from a former communist regime in eastern Europe. We propose to develop strict criteria which would regulate any such continued imports. Our criteria would take account of the technical and environmental characteristics of the waste stream, and the circumstances of the exporting country. Except for small quantities particularly from developing countries, we would propose that the transitional period should not exceed three years at most.

We do not contemplate importing from countries in a position to develop their own disposal facilities, but taking no action to do so. That would be quite contrary to our policy towards self-sufficiency. Nor would we allow imports which could not be safely handled and managed within the existing disposal capacity in the United Kingdom.

We shall be making more detailed proposals on exports and imports in the form of a draft waste management plan, which will incorporate technical guidance designed to assist competent authorities in making decisions. There will be a full opportunity for consultation on the draft plan, and I hope this will proceed soon.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: The information requested is as follows:

Mrs. Katherine Ramsay

Political Adviser; joined in 1986, left in November 1989.

Mr. Patrick Rock

Political Adviser; joined on 13 July 1987, left on 28 November 1990; joined on 1 May 1992, left on 27 May 1993.

Mr. Tim Collins

Political Adviser; joined on 28 September 1989, left on 29 January 1990.

Professor David Pearce

Expert Adviser on Economic Environmental Matters; joined on 26 July 1989, left on 10 April 1992.

Mr. Richard Marsh

Political Adviser; joined on 29 January 1990, left on 3 June 1991.

Dr. Alan Kemp

Political Adviser; joined on 28 January 1991, left on 10 April 1992.

Sir Peter Levene

Expert Adviser on commercial and financial affairs; joined in February 1991, left on 10 April 1992.

Lady Eileen Strathnaver

Political Adviser; joined on 4 February 1991, left on 10 April 1992.

Professor Peter Hall

Mr. Tom Burke

Expert Adviser on the Environment; joined on 18 March 1991. Still with the Department.

Miss Alison Broom

Mr. James Gray

Political Adviser; joined on 3 June 1992. Still with the Department.

Mr. Keith Adams

Political Adviser; joined on 28 May 1993. Still with the Department.

Mr. Liam O Connor

Expert Adviser on Architecture; joined on 14 March 1994. Still with the Department.

Salaries for special advisers are negotiated individually in relation to their previous earnings, and are confidential. They are, however, normally paid on a special adviser's salary spine of 34 points, ranging from £19,503 to £67,609. Appointments are non-pensionable, and the salary reflects this.

Direct Services Organisation, Liverpool

Mr. Alton: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has now received a report from the district auditor into the losses by Liverpool city council's direct services organisation during its handling of the city's cable television contract; what action will be taken against those responsible for these losses; whether he will publish the report and his response; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment has not yet received the district auditor's report. We will consider very carefully all the facts informing the district auditor's conclusions before making a decision on statutory action. Publication of the report is not a matter for my right hon. Friend.

Green List Wastes

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the quantity of green list wastes exported to non-OECD countries since 6 May 1994 and the companies to which this waste was exported in the receiving countries.

Mr. Atkins: This information cannot be provided except at disproportionate cost.

Waste Exports

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if the United Kingdom has entered into any bilateral agreements with non-OECD countries for the export of hazardous waste for recovery and recycling; and if the European Commission has begun any negotiations on such bilateral agreements on the United Kingdom's behalf.

Mr. Atkins: The United Kingdom has not entered into any bilateral agreements with non-OECD countries for the export of hazardous waste for recovery and recycling. The European Commission is considering requests from certain non-OECD countries for such agreements.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will detail the procedure used since 6 May 1994 to ensure that exports of hazardous waste for recycling or recovery are processed in an environmentally sound manner in the destination country.

Mr. Atkins: The Government's advice on the procedures to be followed is given in part 3 of Department of Environment circular 13/94, copies of which are in the Library. Day-to-day control over trans-frontier shipments of waste is a matter for waste regulation authorities.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list (a) the commodity code number, (b) the destination countries, (c) the month of export, (d) the United Kingdom port of exit, (e) the importing companies and (f) the tonnages of hazardous waste exported for recycling or recovery to non-OECD countries since 6 May 1994.

Mr. Atkins: This information is not available centrally.

Standard Spending Assessments

Mr. Raynsford: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to publish the standard spending assessment methodology handbook.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I hope that it will be possible to publish it in January.

Fire Services, Isle of Wight

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received relating to the standard spending assessment for fire services for the Isle of Wight; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: We have received a number of representations on the standard spending assessment from the relevant authorities on the Isle of Wight and my hon. Friend, most recently in a meeting with the Minister for Local Government, Housing and Urban Regeneration on 25 October.

We have listened to the arguments that my hon. Friend and others have put forward and we propose a change to the fire formula to recognise that coastal authorities cannot draw on reinforcements as easily as those inland.

Local Authority Services

Mr. Faber: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what are his proposals for bringing competition to bear on local authorities' corporate and administrative services.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: Corporate and administrative work comprises a number of distinct administrative support services as diverse as printing and reprographics, and building facilities management. These are provided to all parts of the authority. Local authorities' increasing recognition of the importance of gaining value for money for these services has meant that much of this work is already being exposed to market pressures. Most local authorities will re-charge in-house users for administrative support services. Those users, particularly where they themselves are exposed to CCT, will be keen to keep overhead costs down and will exert pressure for cost-effective and efficient support services.

Customers for administrative support increasingly have the freedom to go elsewhere if in the in-house service is inadequate. A significant proportion of administrative support services are already provided by external contractors, and some authorities have dispensed entirely with in-house support staff for much of the work.

The Government's discussions with local authority representatives have led me and my colleagues in Government to conclude that our objective of increasing competition in corporate and administrative support services is already being met though these means, and that extension of CCT to take this work would not bring sufficient additional benefits. We have, therefore, decided not to proceed with proposals to introduce CCT for local authority corporate and administrative services.

Non-domestic Rates

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will explain the basis of his calculations of the distributable amount of non-domestic rates for 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: The distributable amount of non-domestic rates in England for 1995–96 will be £11,354 million. This is based on a non-domestic rate multiplier of 0.432 and includes an allowance of £505 million for an Exchequer payment to the non-domestic rates pool to compensate for the shortfall which would otherwise occur as a result of regulations to be made under section 58 of the Local Government Finance Act 1988 which will phase in the effects of the 1995 revaluation on rate bills.

The calculation for 1995–96, and the prior-year figures on which this is based, are set out in the following table:

Notes:

(1) Item 1: The gross calculated rate yield represents the average value of non-domestic hereditaments on local rating lists times the multiplier. For 1990–91 to 1993–94 the yield is the amount recorded in the post-end year (NNDR3) returns. For 1994–95 it is the amount underlying authorities' provisional contributions to the non-domestic rating pool including the prescribed amount for Enterprise Zones.

(2) Item 1(i)(a): The Transitional decrease adjustment includes the estimated amount of rates that will not be recouped locally due to the revised transitional arrangements under the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Acts 1992, 1993 and 1994.

(3) Item 1(i)(b): The empty property relief adjustments include voids and partially occupied hereditaments. Figures up to 1994–95 are as reported by authorities. The 1995–96 figure includes allowances for the increase in the gross rates yield and for economic recovery.

(4) Item 1(i)(c): Charitable rate relief for 1995–96 includes an allowance for the increase in the gross rates yield.

(5) Item 1(i)(d): Discretionary relief granted to charities non-profit making organisations and for other reasons, for 1995–96 includes an allowance for the increase in the gross rates yield.

(6) Item 1(ii)(a) and (b): The allowances for the costs and losses incurred by local authorities in collecting non-domestic rates from ratepayers, including the latest estimates of additional billing and software costs arising from the Non-Domestic Rating Acts.

(7) Item 1(ii)(c): City Offset—a preliminary estimate for 1995–96 (£6.5 million) of the amount which the City of London will not be required to pay into the non-domestic rating pool on account of the local rate in the City. It is the amount which will be retained by the authority to meet its own expenditure.

(8) Item 1(iii)(a): Net adjustment in respect of appeals and other amendments to the rating list affecting liability for previous year's rates settled in that year.

(9) Item 1(iii)(b): The revisions to contributions line applies only to estimated outturn revisions to the provisional contributions for 1994–95. For earlier years all figures are already based upon the outturn contributions.

(10) Item 2: The rateable value of non-domestic hereditaments on the central rating list times the multiplier, and adjusted for appeals and other changes in respect of previous years. The 1995–96 figure is calculated as the estimated Rateable Value of £2,803 million times the multiplier, less the effect of the transitional arrangements.

(11) Item 3: The 1995–96 figure for crown properties includes and allowance for the effect of transition.

(12) Item 4(a) and (b): The contribution from central government to offset the amount of the Secretary of State's estimate of income forgone arising from the provisions of the Non-Domestic Rating Acts 1992, 1993 and 1994.

(13) Where figures have been rounded there may be a small discrepancy between totals and the sum of constituent items.

Support Services

Mr. Sumberg: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment what plans he has for establishing an accounting framework for local authority support service costs, as proposed in the White Paper, "Competing for Quality: Competition in the Provision of Local Authority Services."

Mr. Robert B. Jones: I have today tabled regulations under the Local Government Finance Act 1982 which will require local authorities to publish annually a statement of support service costs. This will illustrate the full costs of the professional support services to which the Government are extending compulsory competitive tendering, and will show the costs of these services to authorities' front-line service departments.

The proposals for SSSCs have been developed in close and productive consultation with the local authority associations, the Audit Commission, the Accounts Commission for Scotland, and the Chartered Institute of Public Finance and Accountancy. A consultation draft of the regulations was issued by my Department on 22 February 1994. Comments were received from 194 local authorities and other interested parties.

In the light of those comments, I have decided that the first SSSCs will be required for 1995-96, rather than 1994-95 as proposed in February, to ensure that authorities have good time to prepare. The regulations also incorporate other technical improvements responding to comments and suggestions received.

Five support services are to become subject to CCT—legal services, construction and property services, IT, finance and personnel services. Parliament has already approved orders under section 2(3) of the Local Government Act 1988 making legal services and construction property services "defined activities", for the purposes of CCT. The SSSC regulations which I have tabled today relate to these services, designating them as "specified activities" to be covered in SSSCs. The Government will, over the next few months, place before Parliament CCT orders for the other three support services. Subject to Parliament's approval of the orders, the Government will table further SSSC regulations bringing them also into the scope of SSSCs.

London boroughs, metropolitan authorities, and joint committees of these authorities are required to produce an SSSC from 1995–96 onwards. Shire authorities, and joint committees of shire authorities, will be required to produce a SSSC from 1996–97, or the second financial year after the coming into being of an authority newly established or reorganised following local government review, should that be later. SSSCs will also be produced by unitary authorities in Wales and by new police authorities established under the Police and Magistrates Courts Act 1994 in due course. SSSCs will be introduced in Scotland under separate legislative procedures.

Local authorities' support services cost more than £4 billion a year. SSSCs will make available authoritative information on these costs, and will be of value to local taxpayers, local authority members, and those responsible for the front-line local authority services, who are the customers for support services and bear the costs. The information will enable informed discussion of support service costs, and promote efficiency and value for money.

I have placed a list of responses to the consultation proposals in the Library, through which copies of individual responses may be obtained.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Data Cross-matching

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what savings he expects from the scheme involving the cross-matching of council tax and housing benefits data obtained from London local authorities with data held by his Department; and what estimate he has made of the number of (a) records to be matched, (b) the likely number of mismatches and (c) withdrawn applications for benefits; and if he will place in the Library the background reports on the implementation of the scheme.

Mr. Arbuthnot: A pilot exercise is currently taking place involving 24 London boroughs. The savings from the pilot are expected significantly to outweigh the costs. Around 800,000 records have been received and matched against departmental records. Three per cent. of the records have been classified as containing inconsistent data and have been referred for further consideration prior to any investigation. No estimate has been made of the numbers of applications withdrawn as a result of the pilot. A full evaluation will take place before a decision is taken on future developments. A copy of the feasibility report will be placed in the Library.

Habitual Residence Test

Mr. Gapes: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social security applicants have been refused benefits under the habitual residence test since it came into operation; and how many of these were born in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Roger Evans: Provisional figures from the Benefits Agency indicate that 6,388 applicants failed to satisfy the habitual residence test. Approximately 2,300 of these were asylum seekers and were entitled to income support under the urgent cases provisions. The other information is not available because the place of birth is not recorded when benefit is claimed.

Social Fund

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many social fund applicants for (a) grants and (b) loans have been turned down in each region in each year since the social fund came into operation.

Mr. Roger Evans: The information that is readily available is set out in the tables.

The figures are for the number of applications that have been refused; some applicants will have made more than one application in any given year.

(1) Figures for 1993–94 have not been provided. This is because information at the level requested could only be derived from a mixture of refusal data by application held under the old computer system and item level data reported by the new system. National refusal statistics by item are provided in the Secretary of State's Annual Report on the Social Fund 1993–94, a copy of which is available in the library.

(2) Statistics on reasons for refusal for the current year are only available by individual item refused. The national figures for April to October 1994 are:

Loans: 1,096,649

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many applications for social fund assistance have been made in each regional office area in each year since the social fund came into operation in terms of (a) community care grants and (b) social fund loans.

Mr. Roger Evans: The administration of the social fund is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 30 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about applications to the Social Fund (SF) for grants and loans by regional office for each year since the SF began.

Since the formation of the Benefits Agency (BA) in April 1991, BA offices are grouped into Districts and these Districts are grouped into Area Directorates within three Territorial Directorates. Prior to April 1991 Departmental local offices were organised into seven regional areas.

Information for the years 1988–89 and 1989–90 is not available by regional area. Details of the number of applications for grants and loans by regional area for the period April 1990 to March 1991 are provided at Annex A. Details of the number of applications for grants and loans by Area Directorate from April 1991 to March 1994 are provided at Annex B.

I hope you find this information helpful.

Hostel Accommodation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many residents for whom social security hostel accommodation payments are made are currently housed in sheds, garages and tents at such hostels.

Mr. Roger Evans: I am not aware of any case for which housing benefit is in payment in such circumstances.

Invalidity Benefit

Mr. McAvoy: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will give the number of current invalidity benefit claimants with post codes of (a) G72, (b) G73 and (c) the Toryglen residents of G42.

Mr. Hague: The administration of invalidity benefit is a matter for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member with such information as is available.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Mr. Thomas McAvoy, dated 30 November 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about Invalidity Benefit (IVB) recipients in certain Glasgow postal areas.

Information is not available in the exact format requested. This is because Benefits Agency District areas do not correspond with postcode boundaries.

Residents within Glasgow postcode areas G72 and G73 are dealt with by the Agency's East Kilbride Benefit Office. Residents within the G42 postcode area are dealt with by the Glasgow Laurieston District Office.

Prior to 14 November 1994, Rutherglen Benefit Office dealt with postcode areas G45, G72 and G73. With effect from 14 November 1994, IVB cases formerly dealt with by the Rutherglen office were transferred to either Laurieston District Office for residents of postal area G45 or East Kilbride Benefit Office for residents of postal areas G72 and G73.

The latest available figures, at 31 October 1994, are prior to that change and I have therefore provided at Annex A a table giving the number of IVB customers at the Laurieston, East Kilbride and Rutherglen offices on that date.

The offices in question have responsibility for a far wider geographical area covering other postcode areas. Figures could be obtained relating specifically to those areas you require only at a disproportionate cost.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support Agency

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the cost so far to the Child Support Agency of its legal advice.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 30 November 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the cost of legal advice to the Child Support Agency.

The Agency incurs no legal costs as legal advice and other legal services are absorbed by the Department of Social Security central budgets.

Mr. Corbyn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many complaints the Child Support Agency has received from people and their representatives about the working operations of the agency.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Miss Ann Chant to Mr. Jeremy Corbyn, dated 30 November 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of complaints received by the Child Support Agency.

From 5 April 1993 to 31 March 1994 the Agency recorded 10,886 complaints. Latest figures available show that the Agency has received a further 9,700 complaints since April 1994. The Agency does not distinguish between complaints against the operations of the Agency and those concerning child support legislation.

I hope that this reply is helpful.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care in receipt of family credit at each child support agency reporting centre have received any maintenance (a) direct from the non-custodial parent and (b) via the Child Support Agency;

(2) how many parents with care not in receipt of benefit at each reporting centre have received any maintenance (a) direct from the non-custodial parent and (b) via the Child Support Agency;

(3) how many parents with care in receipt of income support at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have received any maintenance (a) direct from the non-custodial parents and (b) via the Child Support Agency;

(4) how many parents with care in receipt of disability working allowance at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have received any maintenance (a) direct from the non-custodial parent and (b) via the Child Support Agency.

Mr. Burt: The information requested is not a business requirement of the agency and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have been taken off income support after receiving maintenance payments;

(2) how many parents with care at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have been taken off income support and are now in receipt of family credit after receiving maintenance payments.

Mr. Burt: The information the hon. Gentleman requires could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Bill Michie: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what plans he has to implement the recommendations contained in the fifth report of the Social Security Committee of Session 1993–94, HC 470, on the operation of the Child Support Act.

Mr. Burt: We are still evaluating the contents of the Select Committee's report and we will respond in due course with proposals for change. No final decisions have yet been taken.

Unemployment Benefit

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security to what level the £35 limit above which occupational pensions are deducted from unemployment benefit could be raised without the cost exceeding the estimated saving from extending such deductions to people aged under 55 years.

Mr. Roger Evans: I refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave on 29 November, Official Report, column 631.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Hague: The information is as follows:

Name	Joining date	Leaving date
Melinda Libby	3 May 1988	24 July 1989
Charles Hendry	25 July 1989	15 December 1989
Ian Stewart	16 August 1990	10 April 1992
Jeremy Mayhew	27 April 1992	12 April 1993
Peter Barnes	4 May 1993

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Hague: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments are, however, required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94, the Department of Social Security paid 94 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Quarantine Regulations

Mr. Nigel Jones: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to alter the quarantine regulations for dogs entering the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Browning: The Agriculture Select Committee has recently published a report recommending changes to the rabies quarantine regulations.

The Government share the concern of the committee that it would never support a change which would increase the likelihood of rabies entering the United Kingdom. The question of whether any other arrangements can offer the same or better protection than quarantine is essentially a technical one which the Government will need to consider carefully. The onus is one those recommending change to demonstrate that it offers at least as good a protection as quarantine.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how a dog or cat has to comply with the new import regulations for traded animals as far as vaccination and identification are concerned.

Mrs. Browning: The regulations require that a dog or cat must have been vaccinated against rabies using an inactivated vaccine after the age of three months and at least six months before dispatch to the United Kingdom. In addition, at least one month after vaccination a blood sample must be taken and tested to confirm that the vaccine has been effective. The only approved method of identification for such imports is by an implanted microchip transponder.

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether all registered animals entering the country since the introduction of the traded animal legislation last summer have complied with the requirements of the new importation rules.

Mrs. Browning: Of the two dogs and one cat imported under the new arrangements set out in article 10(3) of EC directive 92/65 one dog has been put into quarantine, because the necessary microchip identification was absent.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Jack: MAFF has placed selected statistical information on Internet, as part of its participation in the pilot CCTA Government information service launched on 10 November. As a result, up to 20 years of agriculture and food statistics are now accessible on Internet. A range of background information about the Department's work and publications is also available, and the MAFF helpline has enhanced its service by introducing an E-mail address for communicating with Internet users.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what prosecutions have resulted in each of the last five years from fraud against the CAP; how much has been recovered; what fines have been imposed; and what equivalent information he has in respect of (a) Italy, (b) Greece and (c) Spain.

Mr. Jack: The information for the United Kingdom for the four years 1990 to 1993 is as follows. Information for earlier years is not readily available.

Year	Numbers of prosecutions	Amounts recovered £	Fines £
1990	26	3,136	23,100
1991	20	70,349	223,650
1992	31	301,601	557,170
1993	31	14,955	309,795

We have no equivalent data available relating to other member states.

Rabies

Mr. David Shaw: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will estimate the results of the oral vaccination of foxes in the Federal Republic of Germany in 1993 and the first half of 1994; and if he will give the number of cases of rabies in both domestic animals and wild animals in Germany during the same period.

(2) how many cases of rabies in human beings were reported in eastern Europe during 1993 and in the first half of 1994.

Mrs. Browning: The information the hon. Member requires can be found in the "Rabies Bulletin Europe", compiled by the World Health Organisation collaborating centre for rabies surveillance and research. This is published on a quarterly basis with a consolidated report issued at the end of each year. Copies of the consolidated reports for the last five years and the two quarterly reports issued so far this year have been placed in the Library of the House.

Spongiform Encephalopathies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many confirmed cases of spongiform encephalopathies in canines there have been; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Browning: Transmissible spongiform encephalopathy has never been confirmed in canines in the United Kingdom, or as far as the Ministry is aware, anywhere else in the world.

Fisheries Council

Mr. Harris: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the Council of Fisheries Ministers held in Brussels on 23 November.

Mr. Jack: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave on 24 November to the Member for Harborough (Mr. Garnier), Official Report, columns 316–17.

Milk Prices

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what plans he has to examine milk price rises and the role of the Milk Marque.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friends the Minister, the Secretary of State for Wales and the President of the Board of Trade examined the outcome of Milk Marque's selling arrangements when they turned down the Dairy Trade Federation's request for a reference to the Monopolies and Mergers Commission in the summer. Now that the milk marketing scheme has come to an end the milk market is subject to the normal competition rules. Scrutiny of the trading behaviour of Milk Marque is now a matter for the competition authorities.

Salmonella

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will make a statement on the progress so far made to eradicate salmonella from eggs.

Mrs. Browning: Following a report of the Advisory Committee on the Microbiological Safety of Food on Salmonella in Eggs, the Government ceased to require the monitoring of commercial egg laying flocks for salmonella and the compulsory slaughter of those infected with salmonella enteritidis in February 1993. Controls on breeding flocks were brought into line with those required under Council directive 92/117/EEC later that year. A survey of home produced eggs carried out by the Public Health Laboratory Service in 1991 revealed that 99.3 per cent. of six-egg packs tested were found not to contain salmonella enteritidis. The steering group for the microbiological safety of food is considering the need for a further survey in 1995. The Government continue to fund research into the control of salmonella in poultry and the survival of salmonella in eggs. The egg industry is actively consolidating best practice for the transport, handling and storage of eggs into an industry code of practice. Much of the industry already had adopted such procedures.

Common Agricultural Policy

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what discussions he has had with the Chancellor of the Exchequer about the high cost of the common agricultural policy prior to the introduction of the European Communities (Finance) Bill.

Mr. Jack: My right hon. Friend is in regular contact with the Chancellor of the Exchequer on matters concerning the cost of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jim Cunningham: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what assessment he has made of the implications of the European Communities (Finance) Bill for the future of the common agricultural policy.

Mr. Jack: The European Communities (Finance) Bill does not of itself have direct implications for the future of the common agricultural policy. CAP expenditure is constrained by the agricultural guideline, a legally binding ceiling. Its growth is restricted to 74 per cent. of the growth in EC GNP. As a result, CAP expenditure as a proportion of the total EC budget will continue to fall. It currently represents 50 per cent. of the total EC budget, as compared with 70 per cent. when the guideline was first introduced in 1988.

Mr. Spring: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food whether he will place a copy of the European Commission report on reform of the common agricultural policy in the Library.

Mr. Waldegrave: This report, entitled "EC Agriculture in the 21st Century", has now been published in the Journal "European Economy" on behalf of the European Commission's Directorate-General II (Economy and Finance) Copies have been placed in the House Libraries.

I welcome the Commission's decision to publish this radical look at the common argriculture policy and shall be study it with interest.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Minister for Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Jack: The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their departmental reports. For 1993–94, MAFF paid 85 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of goods and services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Jack: The names of special advisers who have joined or left the Department in the last five years is as follows:

	1990	1991	1992	1993	1994
Joined	Keith Adams	—	—	Elizabeth Cottrell, Ken Leggett	David Rutley
Left	Richard Gueterbock	—	—	Keith Adams	Elizabeth Cottrell, Ken Leggett

Hill Farming

Mr. Welsh: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what acreage has been put into regeneration of the natural habitat in hill farming; and if he will evaluate the effect this will have on hill farm incomes.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 November 1994]: The environmentally sensitive areas scheme includes provisions for annual payments to farmers for the regeneration of heather moorland and other upland habitats. Some 16,000 hectares of land are being managed under those tiers of the scheme in England. Other schemes also provide assistance to hill farmers for habitat enhancement but it is not possible to quantify the area of land benefiting from those schemes. It is not possible to isolate the effect which any of these measures will have on hill farm incomes.

Live Animal Exports

Mr. Morley: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if any of those holding the licences to export live animals from Plymouth on the night of 21 November have any previous convictions for animal cruelty; who are these people; and what their specific convictions are for.

Mrs. Browning [holding answer 24 November 1994]: There is no requirement for such persons to be licensed. We are aware that some involved recently in the export of animals may have past convictions for welfare offences, but prohibition from engaging in the trade is not a penalty provided for by statute.

Secret Files

Mr. Byers: To ask the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many (a) top secret and (b) secret files his Department holds.

Mr. Jack [holding answer 24 November 1994]: This Department operates a de-centralised record-keeping system and no central records, either of fies or of its individual classification, are kept. There is unlikely to be a great number of top secret and secret files but because no central record is kept in MAFF to obtain this information by a departmental inquiry to al the various registries would be time consuming and at a disproportionate cost.

DEFENCE

Market Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out the basis of calculating savings on his Department's competing for quality programme; and if he will have a statement.

Mr. Freeman: Savings and efficiency gains against the Department's competing for quality programme are calculated against a baseline of the annual cost of the existing activities before market testing. For costing purposes, it would be expected that full costs, representing the total cost of resources used in providing a particular service, including the direct costs of the service and a proportional share of overhead costs, would be used.

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 November 1994, Official Report, column 135, if he will list the 82 support activities which have been examined in relation to the competing for quality programme.

Mr. Freeman: I will write to the hon. Member as soon as possible and place a copy of my reply in the Library of the House.

Counselling

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will set out his Department's arrangements for counselling service personnel and ex-service personnel; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: There are many forms of counselling, ranging from an interview or discussion with a commanding officer or chaplain to a series of sessions with a doctor, professional social or welfare worker or counsellor, and covering the whole range of personal and professional problems. Illustrative examples would be: the provision of marriage guidance counselling for serving members of the forces and their dependants in Germany through a grant to Relate—to replicate facilities in the United Kingdom— active programmes for the prevention and treatment of the condition known as post-traumatic stress disorder; and a comprehensive system of education and treatment in relation to alcohol abuse. Counselling of former service personnel would generally be through those channels available to the population at large, for example, the national health service or local authorities.

Civil Servants

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) by grade those members of his Department who have left his Department in the last two years to join defence or defence-related companies, (b) the companies involved and (c) the number joining each company.

Mr. Freeman: I have placed a list in the House of Commons Library answering this question and have written to the hon. Member with the details.

Indonesia

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the value, (b) the source of finance and (c) the work carried out over the last five years by the Defence Research Agency for the Government of Indonesia.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for such matters rests with the chief executive of the Defence Research Agency. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from John Chisholm to Mr. Derek Fatchett, dated 1 December 1994:

In today's written answer the Minister of State for Defence Procurement informed you that I would be replying to your question concerning work carried out by the Defence Research Agency for the government of Indonesia over the last five years.

The Defence Research Agency was established in April 1991 by bringing together the Royal Aerospace Establishment, Royal Armament Research and Development Establishment, Royal Signals and Radar Establishment and the Admiralty Research Establishment. Since that date the DRA has undertaken no work for the government of Indonesia

Complete records are not available for the period prior to April 1991, but a check of those that are still held has not come up with any instances of work being carried out for the government of Indonesia during the two years in question.

Mr. Fisher: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence on which dates the Chief of the Defence Staff and the Vice-Chief of the Defence Staff visited Indonesia last year; at whose invitation and at whose expense.

Mr. Soames: Neither the Chief of Defence Staff nor the Vice-Chief of the Defence Staff visited Indonesia in 1993. The Chief of Defence Staff visited Indonesia from 8 to 12 October 1994. The Vice-Chief of the Defence Staff visited Indonesia from 27 February to 2 March 1994. Both visits were at the invitation of their Indonesia counterparts. Travel costs arising from both visits were met by my Department; accommodation was provided by the hosts.

Animal Testing

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list (a) the Ministry of Defence establishments at which tests are carried out using animals and (b) the total number of tests at each establishment over the last five years.

Mr. Soames: Experiments using animals were carried out in the period 1989–1993 at the Chemical and Biological Defence Establishment, the Defence Research Agency at Alverstoke and the Institute of Aviation Medicine, now the Centre for Human Sciences.

Experiments are carried out only when it is judged essential, and fully meet both the spirit and letter of the Animals (Scientific Procedures) Act 1986. The locations are registered places under that Act with relevant staff being licensed by the Home Office and subject at all times to Home Office inspection. The total number of experiments for the past five years is as follows:

1990: 8,146
1991: 6,100
1992: 4,500
1993: 6,796

Lockheed

Mr. Fatchett: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his answer of 22 November, Official Report, columns 138–9, if he will list (a) the meetings held with Market Access International and (b) the representations received from Market Access International regarding the Lockheed C130-J by his ministerial colleagues or staff.

Mr. Freeman: To the best of my knowledge, neither I nor any of my ministerial colleagues, or our staff, have either received representations from Market Access International, or met any of its personnel in connection with the Hercules rolling replacement programme.

Late Payments

Mr. Betts: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months;

(2) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months, respectively.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for such matters rests with the chief executive of the Defence Accounts Agency. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from M. J. Dymond to Mr. Clive Betts, dated 1 December 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice, and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

You also asked the Secretary of State for Defence, of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department, how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months respectively. These matters fall to me, as Chief Executive of the Defence Accounts Agency, for reply.

The information is not available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Departments, however, are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in the Departmental Reports. For financial year 1993–94 Ministry of Defence paid 99.99 per cent. of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice.

The MOD bill payment office at Liverpool also measure their performance against the higher departmental standard of payment within eleven working days of receipt of a valid invoice. They are currently achieving 97 per cent.

Armoured Vehicles

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many of each type of armoured personnel carrier and light tank surplus to his Department's requirements have been or are to be sold in the 1994–95 financial year.

Mr. Freeman: The information requested is as follows:

Vehicle Type	Quantity
CENTURION Armoured Recovery Vehicle MK2	54
HUMBER 1 TON PIG Armoured Personnel Carrier	109
CHIEFTAIN Main Battle Tank MK10	29
CHIEFTAIN Armoured Vehicle Recce	1
ABBOT 105mm Self Propelled Gun	15
SULTAN Armoured Command Vehicle	17
FOX 30 mm Gunned Combat Vehicle Recce (Wheeled)	2
SCORPION 76mm Gunned Combat Recce (Tracked)	40
FERRET Scout Car	35
SARACEN Armoured Personnel Carrier (Wheeled)	16
432 Armoured Personnel Carrier	78
SALADIN 76mm Gunned Armoured Car	1
434 Tracked Engineer Support Vehicle	8
M109 GUNS 155mm Self Propelled Howitzer	117

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence to whom, and under what procedure, armoured personnel carriers and light tanks surplus to his Department's requirements have been sold since 1985; and what financial gain has resulted for Her Majesty's Government.

Mr. Freeman: The Disposals Sales Agency as a general rule sells surplus armoured fighting vehicles, of all types, by invitation to tender. Occasionally, private treaty sales have been agreed, normally to collectors/museums or companies involved in refurbishment and update work aiming to sell similar vehicles overseas. More recently, vehicles have been sold to companies for smelting. Sales to acceptable foreign Governments are either by direct contract or through an agent accredited to the purchaser. Any vehicle which is to be exported requires an export licence from the Department of Trade and Industry. Vehicles which have ordnance fitted are either demilitarised prior to sale or sold to companies which intend to market them for export and have appropriate firearms licences.

Details of financial gain to HMG would require disproportionate effort to establish as previous records are not readily available. It is not our policy to reveal the details of purchasers without their written permission.

Military Contracts

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will take steps to prevent military personnel from evading the terms of their military contracts by deliberate law-breaking;

(2) what evidence he has received of deliberate law-breaking by young Army personnel in order to be dismissed from the service and evade their service contract obligation.

Mr. Soames: Although statistical evidence is not available, it is well known that soldiers do on occasion attempt to gain release from their engagement early by committing a disciplinary offence.

Service personnel do not have contracts but serve under the royal prerogative. All service personnel are made aware that if they are found to have committed an offence under service law, they will be liable for the appropriate punishment. This may not necessarily include administrative discharge or dismissal even if that is the aim of the individual concerned. However, any personnel who commit offences under service or civilian law, for whatever reasons, risk incurring a criminal record.

Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) on what dates since 1992 his Ministers have visited the military corrective training centre at Colchester;

(2) when he last visited the military corrective training centre based in Colchester.

Mr. Soames: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for Defence has not visited the centre, but the then Minister of State for the Armed Forces, my right hon. Friend the Member for Epsom and Ewell (Sir A. Hamilton) visited it on 7 December 1992, and the Under-Secretary of State for Defence visited it on 22 June this year.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what plans there are for privatising the military corrective training centre at Colchester;

(2) what plans he has to further reduce staffing levels at the military corrective training centre based at Colchester;

(3) what changes in manpower and costs have accompanied the evaluation currently taking place at the Colchester military corrective training centre;

(4) what consideration he is giving to the further privatisation of any services connected with the military corrective training centre in Colchester;

(5) what reports he has commissioned into the possible privatisation of the military corrective training centre based at Colchester or any of its services therein;

(6) what discussions his Department has held aimed at the possibility of handing over to another body responsibility for the military corrective training centre based at Colchester.

Mr. Soames: A feasibility study has been conducted into market testing of the functions of the centre, the results of which are currently being considered by my Department. Appropriate consultation with trades unions and others will be undertaken before any final decisions are taken.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what representations he has received against the privatisation of the catering services at the military corrective training centre at Colchester.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he is giving to the closure of the Colchester military corrective training centre.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans to close the centre.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the military equipment used for training for prisoners serving sentences at the military corrective training centre at Colchester.

Mr. Soames: The military equipment used for the training of detainees in "A" wing are as follows:

Various weapons

Radios

Webbing and clothing

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what were the levels of staffing by definition and grade of the military corrective training centre in Colchester since 1992.

Mr. Soames: The levels of staffing at the military corrective training centre since 1992 are:

Number	Rank/Grade	Definition
Military
1	Lieutenant Colonel	Commanding Officer
5	Majors	Section Managers
3	Captains
1	Flight Lieutenant
3	Warrant Officers Class 1	Supervisors
8	Warrant Officers Class 1	Security NCO
1	Warrant Officer Class 2	APTC
1	Warrant Officer Class 2	Catering
5	Warrant Officer (Female)	Security NCO
19	Staff Sergeants	Security NCO
66	Staff Sergeants	Security NCO
1	Sergeant	Medical
1	Sergeant	Armoury
1	Sergeant	Pay
1	Sergeant	Pioneer
9	Se rgeants (RAF)	Security NCO
2	Petty Officers (Male)	Security NCO
1	Sergeant (RM)	Security NCO
1	Sergeant	Catering
4	Sergeant (Female)	Security NCO
6	Sergeants (WRAF)	Security NCO
4	Corporals	Catering
6	Corporals	PTI
1	Corporal Storeman	Armoury
2	Corporals	General Duties
1	Corporal	Driver
3	Lance Corporals	Medical
2	Lance Corporals	Stores
7	Lance Corporals	Catering
Civilian
1	Retired Officer
2	Burnham Lecturers
1	Civil Servant Executive Officer
4	Instructional Officers
5	Administrative Officers (Civil Servants)
2	Administrative Assistants (Civil Servants)
2	Typists
2	Storekeepers

The catering services were contractorised on 1 September 1994. All military catering staff, except for the W02 (Catering), left MCTC during the period June to September 1994.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will state what armaments and live ammunition, by category, are stored at the military corrective training centre in Colchester;

(2) whether the military corrective training centre based at Colchester has a fully operational and stocked armoury on site;

(3) whether prisoners at the military corrective training centre at Colchester have any contact during their incarceration with issued weapons and live ammunition.

Mr. Soames: The centre has a fully operational and stocked armoury. The weapons are for the use of detainees who will be returning to their units at the end of their period of detention. Detainees who are to be dismissed or discharged after serving their period of detention are not given weapon training.

The following weapons are held at the centre, including personal weapons of members of staff:

121 x 5.56 mm rifles
35 x 9 mm pistols
8 x 22" conversion kit
15 x 7.62 mm rifles
24 x 5.56 mm SUSAT rifles
24 x 5.56 mm Iron rifles
4 x 5.6 mm light support weapon (machine gun)

The quantity of ammunition held for these weapons is small and varies on a daily basis depending on training programme.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give the ranks held by all prisoners prior to their convictions and subsequent detention at the military corrective training centre in Colchester since 1987.

Mr. Soames: This information is not held centrally and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Service personnel under sentence arrive at the military corrective training centre in the rank of private, or equivalent.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether the director of Prison Services has paid a visit to the military corrective training centre at Colchester.

Mr. Soames: The director of Prison Services, Mr. Derek Lewis, visited the military corrective training centre, Colchester, on 24 March 1994.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration he is giving to closing the present discharge wing at the Colchester military corrective training centre.

Mr. Soames: There are no plans at present to close the discharge wing at the centre.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will give the numbers and ages of prisoners in military goals dismissed from the services for drug taking since 1992;

(2) if he will give the numbers, ages and convictions of prisoners currently jailed at the military corrective training centre in Colchester since 1992;

(3) when the decision was made to privatise the catering services establishment at the military corrective training centre in Colchester and what was the date of its commencement.

Mr. Soames: My noble Friend the Under-Secretary of State for Defence will write to the hon. Member on those subjects.

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what are the responsibilities of the Colchester military corrective training centre with regard to the rehabilitation of offenders into civilian life.

Mr. Soames: Personnel who are to be dismissed from the service or discharged after serving their period of detention undergo four weeks resettlement training in various trades. The training is designed to prepare them for civilian life by improving their trade skills and developing their self reliance and self respect.

Special Advisers

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the special advisers employed by his Department in each of the last five years indicating when they (a) joined and (b) left his Department and the annual salary they received.

Mr. Freeman: A list of the special advisers employed by my Department in each of the last five years is give below:

Name	Joined the Department	Left the Department
Keith Simpson	July 1988	December 1990
John Gardner	June 1991	March 1992
Perry Miller	April 1992	February 1993
Crispin Blunt	February 1993

Compensation Payments

Mr. Churchill: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence from what vote and subhead compensation payments to former service women dismissed on grounds of pregnancy are currently made; how much has been allowed for in the 1994–95 supply estimates; what recourse has been made to the contingencies fund; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Compensation payments to former service women dismissed on grounds of pregnancy are made from class 1 vote 1—defence operational and support costs—subhead item J2(2). Within this, provision in the supply estimates for 1994–95 is £25 million. No recourse has been made to the contingencies fund. Some 70 per cent. of these cases have now been settled for an average of about £10,000 each.

Commemorative and Memorial Services, Arnhem

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department made a financial charge to members of the armed forces to participate in the commemorative and memorial services at Arnhem.

Mr. Soames: Essential costs associated with the presence of service men in Arnhem were met from the public purse. The main British presence was provided by the Parachute Regiment. Each soldier and officer who attended was asked to pay £5 to cover the cost of recreational transport provided by the Dutch authorities. This arrangement was considerably cheaper and more convenient than if individuals had been left to find alternative means of transport.

Defence Contracts

Mr. Hutton: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what payments his Department made and to which United Kingdom warship builders, to encourage or support the submission of tenders for the replacement programme for HMS Fearless and HMS Intrepid; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Freeman: None.

Historic Aviation Buildings

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he has taken to preserve the historic aviation buildings at Farnborough, Hampshire from demolition; and if he will make statement.

Mr. Soames: On current plans, the buildings occupied at present by the Defence Research Agency at Farnborough will be vacated in the latter part of 1996. We are in the process of defining a strategy for the future of the site. There are at present no plans to demolish any historic aviation buildings at Farnborough.

Gulf War

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what consideration was given to issuing protective clothing to British service personnel in the Gulf conflict using malathion sprays on captured Iraqi service men; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: Standard instructions are the MOD personnel applying dusting powder containing 1 per cent. malathion need not wear protective clothing unless performing lengthy collective treatment procedures. The relatively small number of Iraqi prisoners of war infested with lice meant that individual administration with dusting powder could take place and that collective spraying and protective clothing were not necessary. Protective clothing was, however, available had collective treatment taken place.

Convoy, A1 Highway

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the mission of his Department's vehicle, registration number 16 AY 60, which formed part of a convoy that travelled on the A1 highway on 28 October; at what location the convoy (a) commenced and (b) terminated its journey; what was the total number of vehicles in the convoy; what was the cargo of each vehicle; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The military convoy in question was undertaking a routine transport movement. It is not our policy, however, to discuss operational details of military movements.

Aircraft

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many Royal Air Force (a) Hawker Siddley Buccaneer, (b) English Electric Canberra and (c) Hawker Hunter aircraft are currently being preserved; what type marks they have; where they are currently based; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: At present there are four Buccaneers, type mark 2B, in storage and 1 Canberra, type mark T4, held in storage at RAF St Athan. There are no Hawker Hunter aircraft being held in storage by the Royal Air Force. The Buccaneer aircraft have been purchased by Hanifield Metals and are being held for collection by the purchaser. The Canberra is held at present in the Fleet Management Reserve long-term reserve category.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many complaints about low flying in each year since 1988 have led to an RAF police investigation being initiated; and how many of the investigations carried out in each year since 1988 have concluded that a breach of low flying regulations had occurred.

Mr. Soames: The information is not available in the format requested. The table below details the total number of investigations carried out by the RAF police flying complaints flight each year from 1988 to the end of 1993; and the number of those where the police confirmed a breach of flying regulations. The 1988 figure for the latter is not available and could be produced only at disproportionate cost. It should be noted that, in addition to low flying incidents, the figures for the number of investigations include other military aircraft activity examined by the RAF police.

Year	Number of RAF Police FCF investigations	Number of cases in which a breach was confirmed
1988	331	not available
1989	423	43
1990	571	13
1991	411	12
1992	718	40
1993	686	47

The above figure of 47 confirmed breaches in 1993 is six more than was listed in the House of Commons Defence Committee Report, HC 314 of Session 1993–94, on low flying. Of these, three were omitted in error from the evidence provided to the Committee; in the other three cases details of the RAF police investigations were not known until after this evidence has been provided.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence which of the 41 low flying avoidance breaches during 1993 listed in his Department's evidence to the Defence Select Committee—HC 314 of Session 1993–94 pp. 35–36—were found by the RAF police investigation not to have been inadvertent.

Mr. Soames: It is not the responsibility of the RAF police to determine whether a breach is inadvertent or deliberate. On receipt of an RAF police report, this is a matter for consideration by the commanding officer of the aircrew concerned, who will take into account the circumstances of the breach, and any factors such as bad weather or flight safety considerations which might be relevant, in determining whether disciplinary or other action is necessary.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the recent use of Tornado aircraft from Royal Air Force Cottesmore to perform low-level passes over a prison establishment.

Mr. Soames: Several low level passes over HM prison Stocken were made on 27 September 1994 at the request of HM Prison Service. This provided a noise distraction and assisted in resolving an incident at the prison.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many breaches of the Eshott avoidance area have taken place in each year since 1989; what measures have been taken to discourage microlight flying from this site on weekdays; and if he will list the measures taken since 1989 to reduce the incidence of breaches of this avoidance area.

Mr. Soames: The numbers of confirmed breaches of the Eshott avoidance area for each year since 1989 are as follows:

1989: 0
1990: 0
1991: 2
1992: 8
1993: 3

The operating times of the airfield, and the use to which it is put, are matters for the civil operator.

In order to reduce the incidence of breaches, notices to airmen have been issued reminding military aircrews of the airfield's avoidance, which is marked on navigation charts and listed in the UK military low flying handbook. In addition, at the end of 1992, changes were made to instructions to foreign aircraft using RAF Spadeadam to ensure they avoid the airfield by a wider margin than previously.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the minimum authorised altitude of the flight by two Belgian air force Mirages which infringed the Sizewell power station avoidance area on 23 August 1993; and at what height the aircraft were flying at the time of the breach.

Mr. Soames: The two aircraft were authorised to operate at a minimum altitude of 2,000 ft minimum separation distance; the RAF police estimated the aircraft were flying at approx 1,000 ft above ground level at the time of the breach.

Air Show (Bratislava)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military aircraft, and of what types, took part in the air show at Bratislava airport, Slovakia, on 20 and 21 August; what were the aims of British participation in the event; and what was the total cost of this participation.

Mr. Soames: The following RAF aircraft were present at the airshow in question:

9 Hawks (Red Arrows)
2 Hawks
4 Tornado GR1
2 Harrier
1 Chinook
1 Hercules

Displays were flown by the Red Arrows and two of the Tornado GR1s. The other aircraft were on static display. All extra costs for accommodation, food and fuel were met by the organisers of the airshow.

Attendance at this airshow was part of my Department's wider policy of enhancing military relations with countries of central and eastern Europe.

RAF Bentwaters

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what discussions he has held with British Aerospace concerning the use of RAF Bentwaters as a base in connection with the showground air combat range.

Mr. Soames: None.

Aircraft Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the air crash at Boscombe Down airfield on the evening of 26 September.

Mr. Soames: I am aware of a press report of such an incident. Staff at Boscombe Down have confirmed, however, that there was no crash at the unit on that date or, indeed, so far this year. The only flying which took place that night was the launch of two Royal Navy Sea King helicopters in support of an exercise.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence how many man hours were spent on repairs to Tornado ZA611 following its accident in December 1986; and on what dates the aircraft has been flown since its accident.

Mr. Soames: Tornado ZA611 was repaired in industry, and the details of the contract covering the repair remain commercially confidential. Since its accident, the aircraft was flown on 19, 22 and 28 January 1993. The aircraft has since been held in storage pending its entry into a modification programme, after which it will return to active service.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the date and circumstances of the accident to Tornado F.3 serial number carried out on the aircraft since its accident, and by which unit; what is the estimated additional number of man hours required to complete repairs to the aircraft; and what is the estimated total cost of restoring the aircraft to front line service following its accident.

Mr. Soames: Tornado F3 ZE250 was damaged on 27 March 1992 during engine ground runs. To date, RAF tradesman have expended 9,025 man hours on the repair, and it is estimated that a further 7,090 man hours will be required before the aircraft can be restored to service. The labour costs of returning the aircraft to service are estimated at approximately £800,000. The cost of spares and materials, which have been provided from existing stocks, could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

International Chart Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the International Chart Service North sea-southern sheet 1:750,000 2182A, INT.1043, published at Taunton on 10 August 1973.

Mr. Soames: It is not our usual practice to lay such charts in the Library. They are widely available, however, from commercial sources.

Hercules Fleet

Mr. Jacques Arnold: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to be able to make an announcement on the future of the RAF's Hercules fleet.

Mr. Freeman: We hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Staffing

Mr. McAllion: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will provide a breakdown by military rank and civilian grade of the number of service personnel and civilian staff employed in (a) the personnel and training command and (b) the logistics command.

Mr. Soames: The strength of the two commands as at 1 October 1994 is as follows:

Military Personnel

	Personnel and Training Command	Logistics Command
Officer Ranks
[1]Air Chief Marshal	2	1
Air Marshal	—	1
Air Vice-Marshal	9	3

Bosnia

Mr. Elletson: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what effects the recently launched offensives by Bosnian Government troops in Bosnia-Herzegovina have had on the safety of British personnel serving under United Nations command; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: We do not assess that British personnel serving under United Nations command have been placed in any significantly greater danger by the recent Bosnian Government offensives. However, we remain very concerned about the upsurge in the fighting and are monitoring the situation closely.

Bombing (Bihac)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has that Croatian Serb aircraft based in Udbira have bombed Bihac; and if he will publish that evidence.

Mr. Soames: On 19 November 1994, UN military observers observed two ORAO jet fighters in the vicinity of Bihac. One aircraft dropped its bombs and headed south; the other struck a building and crashed. This and other attacks were widely reported. Croatia is not known to possess ORAO aircraft and no Bosnian-Serb ORAO was reported to have been airborne at the time of attack. The Croatian Serb—Republic of Serb Krajina—airfield at Udbina lies to the south of Bihac and some of its armed ORAO aircraft were reported to have been airborne prior to the attacks at Bihac.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what evidence he has of the dropping of napalm bombs on Bihac; and if he will publish that evidence.

Mr. Soames: A UN military observer reported that on 18 November 1994 a fixed-wing aircraft dropped three bombs on Bihac. From evidence collected by UNMOs at the impact points, one of the bombs was identified as a napalm bomb, but this was unexploded. The others were cluster bombs.

Departmental Payments

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average and the median time his Department has taken to pay suppliers in each of the last 12 months; and what proportion of bills took more than six weeks to pay.

Mr. Freeman: Responsibility for such matters rests with the chief executive of the Defence Accounts Agency. I have therefore asked him to reply.

Letter from M. J. Dymond to Mr. Austin Mitchell, dated 1 December 1994:

You asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the average and the median time his Department has taken to pay suppliers in each of the last 12 months, and what proportion of bills took more than 6 weeks to pay. This matter falls to me, as Chief Executive of the Defence Accounts Agency, for reply.

2. Departments are required to provide details of their annual payment performance in their Departmental Reports. For financial year 1993/94, Ministry of Defence paid 99.9 percent of its bills in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of the presentation of a valid invoice.

3. The MOD bill payment office at Liverpool also measure their performance against the higher departmental standard of payment within 11 working days of receipt of a valid invoice. They are currently achieving 97 percent.

4. As the vast majority of bills are paid within the 11 day target the average and median over the last 12 months would not be meaningful, but I have listed below, for each of the last 12 months for which figures are available, information which I hope you find useful.

Month	Number of bills received	Percentage paid within 11 days	Percentage paid within 30 days	Number paid after 30 days
October 1993	258,459	97.94	99.99	15
November 1993	277,925	96.96	99.98	32
December 1993	258,203	96.10	98.09	31
January 1994	249,488	97.72	99.99	21
February 1994	244,325	98.86	99.99	12
March 1994	283,141	97.67	99.98	43
April 1994	272,224	95.6	99.99	10
May 1994	272,133	95.19	99.98	31
June 1994	250,732	96.9	99.99	16
July 1994	244,214	96.28	99.91	208
August 1994	231,125	96.38	99.99	1
September 1994	209,821	97.73	99.99	3
	3,051,790			423

All bills were paid wihtin six weeks of receipt at Liverpool.

Internet

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what plans he has to provide information via Internet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: My Department already uses Internet to make information widely available. In particular, press releases are made available electronically through the Central Office of Information to be accessible to users of Internet via data-star dialog (Europe) or Mead/Lexis/Nexis. My Department was involved, with the US Department of Defense, in the early development of Internet and has used Internet facilities for research purposes for many years. Security considerations prevent its widespread use within my Department but we are currently considering extending our use of Internet, to include the provision of a facility for making some Defence information, currently published in open literature, available electronically in a similar format to that adopted by the Central Computers and Telecommunications Agency and HM Treasury.

Written Answers to Questions

HOME DEPARTMENT

Revenge Agency Services

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has in respect of those who (a) advertise and (b) publish advertisements for Revenge Agency Services.

Mr. Maclean: I am not aware of this organisation.

School Crossing Patrols

Ms Walley: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many police forces have transferred responsibility for school crossing patrol services to either local authorities or local education authorities.

Mr. Maclean: Information in the form requested is not available but we understand from a recent survey that about 10 police forces in England and Wales provide school crossing patrol services on behalf of local authorities.

Intoxicating Liquor

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what considerations led him to refuse to give consent over a byelaw on the consumption of intoxicating liquor in public places in Leamington Spa.

Mr. Baker: My right hon. and learned Friend has not refused to give consent to the byelaw. Home Office officials wrote to Warwick district council on 29 November seeking some additional necessary information to enable the byelaw application to be further considered.

Disclosure of Evidence

Mr. Mullin: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what plans he has for giving effect to the recent High Court judgment on disclosure of evidence in alleged cases of miscarriage of justice; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Nicholas Baker: I am considering what action to take in the light of this judgment.

Safer Cities Projects

Sir Ivan Lawrence: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department, if he will make a statement on the further safer cities projects to be established in Wales.

Mr. Maclean: I am pleased to announce that we are setting up two further safer cities projects in Wales to bring the total to three. These will be established in Cardiff and Rhyl early next year to add to the one already running in Merthyr Tydfil. A total of 32 areas have now been selected for projects under phase 2 of the safer cities programme.

Murder (Right to Silence)

Mr. Jamieson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Home Department what measures he intends to take to ensure that parents who murder their children and refuse to give evidence against each other are brought to justice.

Mr. Maclean [holding answer 28 November 1994]: The courts will impose a life sentence on any person convicted of murder. But a court will not convict if there is no evidence to link a particular person to the murder. Nor, in the absence of any other evidence, will a court convict a defendant on the basis of his silence alone. The Royal Commission on Criminal Justice considered the issue of inferences from silence, but did not recommend any changes to the principle against self-incrimination.

HEALTH

GP Fundholders

Mr. Milburn: to ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the management allowances payments made to general practitioner fund-holding practices and practices preparing to be fundholders (a) by wave and (b) in total for each (i) family health service agency and (ii) region.

Mr. Malone: I refer the hon. Member to the reply that my right hon. Friend the then Minister for Health gave him on 26 January at column 300. The available figures for 1993–94 will be placed in the Library.

Regional Health Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what has been the total loss to public funds of maladministration of Wessex, West Midlands and Trent regional health authorities.

Mr. Malone: The 57th report of the Public Accounts Committee contained an estimate that some £10 million was lost on the management of the former regionally managed services organisation of West Midlands regional health authority. It has also been estimated that some £20 million of expenditure on the regional information systems plan has not resulted in benefits to patients in the former Wessex region. In the case of Trent RHA, the district auditor issued a report to the authority about the transfer of services to the private sector between 1988 and 1992, in which he stated that there was no reliable method of determining the difference between what the authority had spent and what would have been spent if competitive tenders had been sought.

Hospital Wards

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will make it her policy to ensure a choice between single sex and mixed wards for all patients of NHS hospitals; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Sackville: It is for individual hospitals to decide in the light of local conditions whether, and if so in what circumstances, mixed sex wards should be used. A new standard in the revised and expanded patients charter to be issued in the new year will expect patients to be told in advance if they are to be treated in mixed sex wards. This will allow them to raise any objections with the hospital which will, where possible, take account of their views.

Health Service Authorities

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will list the number of (a) regional health authorities, (b) health authorities, (c) family health service authorities and (d) health trusts at 30 September.

Mr. Malone: The numbers of authorities and trusts at 30 September 1994 were:

Authorities and Trusts	Number
Regional health authorities	8
District health authorities	111
Family health services authorities	90
NHS trusts	419

NHS Managers

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will instruct health authorities and NHS trusts to take urgent steps to reduce the number of managers and increase the number of nursing and care staff; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: No. General and senior managers represent only 2.6 per cent. of the NHS work force compared with 50.3 per cent. for nurses. Between 1983 and 1993 the number of qualified nurses increased by 8.3 per cent. and in 1993 there were additionally about 28,000 Project 2000 learners who are not included in the figures.

Dentistry

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will ensure the availability of free national health service dentistry to all who require it; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Malone: Family health service authorities report that there are no patients for whom national health service dental treatment cannot be arranged. There are extensive arrangements for exemption from and remission of NHS dental charges. The Green Paper, "Improving NHS Dentistry", makes clear that we have no plans to change these arrangements.

Patients' Complaints

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what changes to legislation are necessary to enable her to dismiss health authority chiefs who fail to deal properly with patients' complaints.

Mr. Malone: Chief executives are employees of health authorities and, as such, can be dismissed only by them. Primary legislation would, therefore, be required to enable my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State to have such power of dismissal.

Ambulances

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what limitation exists on the total number of hours that ambulance drivers can be called upon to work in any 24-hour period.

Mr. Sackville: Ambulance drivers are subject to the United Kingdom legislation on drivers' hours.

For non-emergency work, these regulations limit driving time to 10 hours a day and impose a daily duty limit of 11 hours.

Any driving in the course of an emergency call-out does not count towards a crew member's daily driving limit, nor to a crew member's daily duty limit.

Diabetics

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will reconsider the decision not to provide pen needles to diabetics on NHS prescription.

Mr. Sackville: We have no plans to do so.

Children (Wandsworth Council)

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health if she will institute an inquiry into the role of Wandsworth council in the investigation of alleged rapes of children in its care.

Mr. Bowis: The only such allegation of which we are aware, which relates to an alleged incident in 1984 is currently being considered by the local government ombudsman. If the hon. Member has knowledge of any other cases, he should refer them to the appropriate authorities.

Prednisolone

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what action she has taken to avoid deaths of children due to the administration of prednisolone.

Mr. Sackville: The Medicines Control Agency and Committee on Safety of Medicines have investigated the issue of the effect of corticosteroids, such as prednisolone, on the body's defence system and in particular the association of severe or fatal chickenpox. Their findings and recommendations were published in the bulletin, "Current Problems in Pharmacovigilance", which was sent to all doctors and pharmacists in February 1994. Doctors were also reminded of this issue in the Chief Medical Officer's update in May 1994. Copies of the documents were placed in the Library.

The Medicines Control Agency has also requested that all pharmaceutical companies producing corticosteroids administered by mouth or injection include further warnings and precautions in their product information, and introduce patient information leaflets. This action is expected to be completed in the near future.

Patients' Rights

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what plans she has to introduce into the patients charter rights as to the holding of open inquiries.

Mr. Malone: None.

Burnley Health Care NHS Trust

Mr. Gordon Prentice: To ask the Secretary of State for Health what is the pension entitlement of Mr. James Rawson the former chairman of Burnley Health Care NHS trust.

Mr. Malone: None.

Ministerial Speeches

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Health on what occasions since 1979 civil servants in her Department have been asked to draft speeches of a constituency nature for use in a Minister's own constituency.

Mr. Sackville: None. Civil servants may provide briefing of a factual nature for Ministers on matters relating to their own Departments. In addition, Ministers in preparing for a constituency speech can draw on material produced by their Department during the normal course of business.

Creutzfeldt-Jakob Disease

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many cases of Creutzfeldt-Jakob disease there are currently diagnosed in the United Kingdom; and what representations she has received regarding the link with pre-1985 infertility treatment.

Mr. Sackville: One hundred and fifty nine definite or probable cases of Creutzfeldt-jacob disease in the United Kingdom have been reported to the CJD surveillance unit, Edinburgh over the four-year period May 1990 to April 1994. No cases have been reported where there is a link with infertility treatment.

On 1 September 1993 the Department established a helpline for women who had been treated for infertility with human derived pituitary gonadotrophin—a treatment no longer given, but which may be associated with the risk of developing CJD. Since 1 September 1993 we have received 15 letters on the subject from hon. Members on behalf of their constituents.

Private Bed Units

Mr. Clapham: To ask the Secretary of State for Health how many NHS hospitals had private bed units; and what was the number of beds in each, in 1990–91 and 1993–94, respectively.

Mr. Sackville: These are local matters about which the Department does not collect information.

Child Minders

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Health when she intends to issue further guidance to local authorities on the registration of child minders; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Bowis: The Department has today issued local authority circular (94)23, "The Children Act 1989: Registration of Child Minders", which clarifies current guidance on the use of physical punishment by child minders. Copies of the circular have been placed in the Library.

ENVIRONMENT

SSSIs

Mr. Dafis: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will include in the Environment Agencies Bill provisions for the reform of the sites of special scientific interest system.

Mr. Atkins: No.

European Charter of Self-government

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all countries who have (a) signed and (b) ratified the European charter of self-government, giving individual dates for each country of signature and ratification.

Mr. Gummer: The information requested, relating to the European charter of local self-government, is as follows:

Member state	Date of signature	Date of ratification or accession
Austria	15 Oct. 1985	23 Sept. 1987
Belgium	15 Oct. 1985
Bulgaria	3 Oct. 1994
Cyprus	8 Oct. 1986	16 May 1988
Denmark	15 Oct. 1985	3 Feb. 1988
Estonia	4 Nov. 1993
Finland	14 June 1990	3 June 1991
France	15 Oct. 1985
Germany	15 Oct. 1985	17 May 1988
Greece	15 Oct. 1985	6 Sept. 1989
Hungary	6 April 1992	21 March 1994
Iceland	20 Nov. 1985	25 March 1991
Italy	15 Oct. 1985	11 May 1990
Liechtenstein	15 Oct. 1985	11 May 1988
Luxembourg	15 Oct. 1985	15 May 1987
Malta	13 July 1993	6 Sept. 1993
Netherlands	7 Jan. 1988	20 March 1991
Norway	26 May 1989	26 May 1989
Poland	19 Feb. 1993	22 Nov. 1993
Portugal	15 Oct. 1985	18 Dec. 1990
Slovenia	11 Oct. 1994
Spain	15 Oct. 1985	8 Nov. 1988
Sweden	4 Oct. 1988	29 Aug. 1989
Turkey	21 Nov. 1988	9 Dec. 1992

Energy Conservation Bill

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list all the parish, town and community councils which have made representations to the Government regarding the Energy Conservation Bill.

Mr. Robert B. Jones: During 1994 the Government have received letters from about 500 members of the public and local councils concerning this Bill, and a larger number on energy efficiency generally. Detailed analysis could be carried out only at disproportionate cost.

Water Companies

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for each of the separate water companies established since privatisation and for each (a) month and (b) year since the companies were privatised, (i) the total number of disconnections carried out by each company and (ii) the percentage of customers of each company this total represents.

Mr. Gummer: The Director General of Water services publishes data on disconnections twice a year, by water company area, for both domestic and non-domestic customers. Information about the numbers of disconnections in the six months to 30 September 1994 showing, for domestic disconnections, the rate per 10,000 households billed, together with numbers of disconnections in each year since 1989–90, was published in an Ofwat news release on 15 November. Copies of this and earlier Ofwat news releases containing similar information are in the Library.

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment by what date he expects to reply to the letter concerning future options for water charging sent to him on 30 September 1994 by the Water Services Association and Water Companies Association; what plans he has for announcing the contents of his reply; if he will place a copy of his reply in the Libraries of both Houses; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gummer: The letter from the associations setting out their views on future methods of charging for water is still being considered. A reply will be sent in due course.

National Rivers Authority

Mr. Dobson: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list (a) all areas of activity currently undertaken by the National Rivers Authority to which the duty of the National Rivers Authority to further conservation apply and (b) any specific such areas of activity or specific activities to which this duty will not apply under his current plans for an environment agency for England and Wales;

(2) if he will publish the exact wording of the clause which he intends to introduce into the Environment Agency Bill to carry forward the current duty of the National Rivers Authority to further conservation; whether this new duty will apply across the full and complete scope of activities of the proposed environment agency for England and Wales; and if he will list all duties which he currently envisages being carried out by the environment agency for England and Wales to which this new duty will not apply.

Mr. Gummer: As I advised the House on 18 November, I wish there to be no doubt about the conservation and sustainable development role of the agency; I am providing a clear duty for the agency not simply to consider conservation issues in relation to all the agency's functions, but to further conservation as appropriate.

The Environment Bill, presented for first reading in another place on 1 December, sets out the conservation duties of the proposed environment agency in clauses 6 and 7.

The conservation duties of the National Rivers Authority are set out in clauses 2 and 16 of the Water Resources Act 1991.

Local Government Reorganisation

Mrs. Gillan: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment, what arrangements he proposes to make for the costs of local government reorganisation in 1995–96.

Mr. Curry: In his statement yesterday, my right hon. Friend announced that provision of £50 million has been made for the transitional costs of local government reorganisation in 1995–96.

Following extensive consultation with local authorities on draft proposals, I am today issuing the details of arrangements under which reorganised authorities will be able to apply for additional resources, in the form of supplementary credit approvals, to cover reorganisation costs in 1995–96. Copies have been placed in the Library.

Invitations will be issued next week to authorities in the Isle of Wight, Cleveland, Avon, North Yorkshire and Humberside to submit applications under the scheme.

Integrated Pollution Control

Mr. Pawsey: To ask the Secretary of State for the Environment whether a change is to be made to the scheme of fees and charges for integrated pollution control operated by Her Majesty's inspectorate of pollution.

Mr. Atkins: A minor change to the HMIP integrated pollution control fees and charges scheme 1994–95 is to take effect retrospectively from 1 June 1994. It introduces a provisional application fee of nil for a number of processes included under IPC by the Environmental Protection (Prescribed Processes and Substances) Regulations, pending further consultation on possible amendment to those regulations.

Copies of the amendment to the scheme are being placed in the Library of both Houses.

LORD CHANCELLOR'S DEPARTMENT

Rape

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Parliamentary Secretary, Lord Chancellor's Department if he will give the number of cases of rape heard by (a) male and (b) female judges each year since 1990.

Mr. John M. Taylor: The information requested is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

WALES

Ophthalmology

Mr. Hain: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish the number of referrals from general practitioners to ophthalmology out-patients clinics for 1990–91 and 1991–92.

Mr. Richards: The number of referrals to NHS hospital out-patient departments for the specialty of ophthalmology was as follows:

Year	Number
1990–91	45,303
1991–92	44,514

Cable Network Franchising

Mr. Sweeney: To ask the Secretary of State for Wales what plans he has for extending cable network franchising in Wales.

Mr. Redwood: Today, the Independent Television Commission is preparing to advertise new franchises for much of south Wales early next year. Franchises for north Wales will follow.

The ITC will consider further franchises as soon as it receives expressions of interest.

I want the whole of Wales to benefit from the broad band communication revolution and look forward to expressions of interest from companies.

PRIME MINISTER

Nuclear Proliferation

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Prime Minister what matters in regard to nuclear proliferation were discussed during his meeting with his Pakistani counterpart on 28 November.

The Prime Minister: Non-proliferation was not raised in my meeting, but my right hon. Friend, the Foreign Secretary, discussed non-proliferation in south Asia with the Pakistani Prime Minister when he called on her on 30 November 1994.

Honours System

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister upon what grounds the grant of an honour may be withdrawn; and in which cases this has happened since 1979.

The Prime Minister: The statutes of most orders of knighthood and the royal warrants of decorations and medals include provision for the Queen to "cancel and annul" appointments and awards. Cancellation is considered in cases where retention of the appointment or award would bring the honours system into disrepute. There are no set guidelines for cancellations, which are considered on a case-by-case basis.

Since 1979, the London Gazette has published details of cancellations of 15 appointments and awards—three knighthoods, one CBE, five OBEs, four MBEs and two BEMs.

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister how many Conservative hon. Members have received knighthoods since 1979.

The Prime Minister: One hundred and fifteen Conservative hon. Members have received knighthoods since 1979.

Former Ministers

Dr. Wright: To ask the Prime Minister which rules cover former Ministers who wish to take appointments in the private sector; and what plans he has to reconsider such rules.

The Prime Minister: Guidance is contained in paragraph 105 of "Question of Procedure for Ministers". This matter is within the terms of reference of the Nolan committee and I will consider the guidance in the light of any recommendations that it may make.

Lockerbie

Mr. Dalyell: To ask the Prime Minister what documentary evidence is available to Her Majesty's Government to support the belief that the bomb which destroyed Pan Am 103 over Lockerbie was dispatched from Luqa airport, Malta.

The Prime Minister: My noble and learned Friend the Lord Advocate is satisfied that there is sufficient evidence to establish the allegations made in the criminal charges against the two Libyans accused, which include the allegation that the bomb was introduced on to an aircraft at Luqa airport, Malta. However, he cannot give details of that evidence while criminal proceedings are pending.

SCOTLAND

Sports Clubs

Mrs. Ewing: To ask the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the total amount of discretionary rates relief given to Scottish sports clubs in the current year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stewart [holding answer 1 December 1994]: Provisional figures provided by regional and islands authorities indicate that the total amount of discretionary rates relief given to Scottish sports clubs in 1994–95 will be £3.464 million.

TRANSPORT

Detective Agencies

Mr. Cohen: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will give the latest cost of using detective agencies in connection with road building schemes in the last five financial years; and what has been the cost in respect of each scheme.

Mr. Watts: This is an operational matter for the Highways Agency. The cost to date, encompassing the last five financial years, is £563,450. The expenditure on individual schemes is as follows:

M3 Bar End–Compton	267,000
A12 Hackney Wick M11 link	185,000
A4/A46 Batheaston/Swainswick bypass	109,000
A11 Besthorpe–Wymindham	450
M65 Blackburn southern bypass	2,000

Rail Privatisation

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he has yet received either (a) an oral or (b) a written agreement from any City of London institution that it will support the privatisation of Railtrack; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Watts: Marketing of shares in Railtrack has not yet commenced and expressions of interest from investors have not been sought.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those items of expenditure and receipts, included under the heading "UR/EPs" in the table accompanying his Department's press notice No. 457, issued on 29 November, which are not included under the heading "Union Railways" in table 1.1 in his Department's Transport Report 1994, Cm 2506, and vice versa.

Mr. Watts: The external finance for UR/EPs set out in the table accompanying the Department's press notice No. 457 now includes provision for European Passenger Services Ltd. EPSL became a separate Government-owned company in May 1994, before which it was part of British Rail.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport (1) if he will update the figure in tables 1.1 and 5.1 of his Department's Transport Report 1994, Cm 2506, to take account of the revised expenditure totals outlined in his Department's press notice, No. 457, issued on 29 November; and if he will show the revised figures alongside the original figures;

(2) if he will update the figures in tables 5.3 and 5.4 of his Department's Transport Report 1994, Cm 2506; and if he will add columns for 1995–96 plans to these updated tables, to take account of the revised expenditure totals outlined in his Department's press notice No. 457, issued on 29 November.

Mr. Watts: The Transport Report 1995 will contain details of the expenditure plans announced in press notice No. 457 on 29 November.

Mr. Bayley: To ask the Secretary of State for Transport if he will list those items of expenditure and receipts, included under the heading "other railway related" in table 1.1 in his Department's Transport Report 1994, Cm 2506; and under what heading these items appear in the table accompanying his Department's press notice No. 457, issued on 29 November.

Mr. Watts : Those items of expenditure included in table 1.1 of the Transport Report 1994 under the heading "other railway related "are listed in table 5.1. These items are included in the table accompanying the Department's press notice No. 457 under the heading, "other departmental programmes and services".

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Crown Prosecution Service

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Attorney-General what plans he has to disband the Crown Prosecution Service and put the provision of prosecution solicitors out to competitive tender and provide for payment by results.

The Attorney-General: As I announced to the House on 27 April 1994, Official Report, column 234, all my departments are considering the question of prior options and the possibility of agency status. In line with general Government policy, these questions involve consideration of privatisation, contracting out and market testing, but no decisions have yet been made. An inter-departmental group of officials including representatives of the Home Office, the Lord Chancellor's Department, the Treasury and the Office of Public Service and Science are at present examining these options and the possibility of agency status in respect of both the Crown Prosecution Service and the Serious Fraud Office.

I expect the group to report to me around the end of the year and that I should then consult ministerial colleagues with the intention of reaching decisions in the earlier part of next year.

SOCIAL SECURITY

Benefits Agency (Wales)

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) if he will estimate the cost of the proposed reorganisation and reduction in number of district benefit offices in Wales;

(2) whether in the proposed reorganisation of the Benefits Agency in Wales (a) any public outlet will close and (b) a full service will continue to be given at each outlet.

Mr. Roger Evans: The structure and operation of the Benefits Agency in Wales are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. John Marek, dated 1 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question about reorganisation of the Benefits Agency (BA) in Wales.

The latest estimated costs attributable to the reorganisation of BA Districts in Wales is £277,400. In addition, the estimated cost of services provided by the Information Technology Services Agency is £303,800. These latter notional costs are subsumed within a fixed service charge for planned mainframe computer service provision. Resulting savings in management and administrative costs arising from economies of scale will be redirected to enhance service provision to our customers. The estimated resource which will be available for reinvestment as a result of the reorganisation is £700,000 year on year.

No offices will close as a result of the reorganisation of District boundaries in Wales, nor will there be any reduction in the standard of service provided. Indeed, the redirecting of resources saved will enhance the service already provided.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Dr. Marek: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what factors led the Benefits Agency to give notice to Property Holdings that it intends to vacate all the offices it presently occupies in Clwyd.

Mr. Roger Evans: The structure and operation of the Benefits Agency in Wales are matters for Mr. Michael Bichard, the chief executive of the Benefits Agency. He will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Michael Bichard to Dr. John Marek, dated 1 December 1994:

The Secretary of State for Social Security has asked me to reply to your recent Parliamentary Question concerning the factors that led to the Benefits Agency giving notice to Property Holdings to vacate all the offices it presently occupies in Clwyd.

As part of its ongoing Estates Strategy, the Benefits Agency keeps the need for maintaining all of its accommodation under regular scrutiny. Local management in Clwyd are considering customer service delivery issues across all offices presently occupied as part of the ongoing business requirement.

The main factor to be considered in respect of future business needs for accommodation is the requirement to ensure that accommodation matches need and that there is no unnecessary and wasteful expenditure on public funds on unsuitable, excessively costed, or overspaced buildings. It is considered essential that full value for money is obtained in delivering the best possible service. A further factor of great importance is the requirement to deliver a One Stop Service to our customers.

Initial research in Clwyd has shown that the amount of accommodation exceeds needs, although no decisions have yet been taken regarding which, if any, accommodation will be vacated and which will be retained. In view of the duration of notice periods required, to ensure that as many options are kept open as possible, and as a precautionary measure to protect public funds, Property

Holdings were initially advised that all properties were to be vacated. Discussions are still on-going and clearly not all properties will be vacated and some properties may be replaced by more suitable ones.

I can assure you that whatever conclusions are reached the prime consideration will be to ensure that customer service outlets are retained in all the current locations in Clwyd and wherever possible the service will be enhanced.

I have arranged for the District Manager to let you know when decisions are reached.

I hope you find this reply helpful.

Child Support

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many parents with care in receipt of income support at each child support agency reporting centre have received reduced maintenance payments as a result of changes to the maintenance arrangements which came into force on 7 February 1994;

(2) how many parents with care not in receipt of benefit at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have received reduced maintenance payments as a result of changes to the maintenance arrangements which came into force on 7 February 1994;

(3) how many parents with care in receipt of family credit at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have received reduced maintenance payments as a result of changes to the maintenance arrangements which came into force on 7 February 1994;

(4) what is the average reduction in child maintenance payments made as a result of the changes to the maintenance arrangements which came into force on 7 February 1994.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 2 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security concerning the effects of the changes to maintenance arrangements which came into force on 7 February 1994.

The Agency only keeps details of the total number maintenance assessments that were reduced. Information showing the number of assessments reduced following computerised reassessment of the Agency's Great Britain caseload is shown in the table below.

Maintenance reduced by more than £1 following automated reassessment

CSAC	Maintenance assessments reduced by more than £1
Belfast	5,219
Birkenhead	5,806
Dudley	7,799
Falkirk	6,299
Hastings	4,474
Plymouth	5,586
Total	35,183

The average reduction in maintenance, based on the cases which were automatically reassessed and where the assessment actually changes, is £9.00 a week.

In a further 4,000 cases, maintenance was not reduced at this stage as the change was less than £1. Another 2,062 cases had maintenance reduced following a clerical reassessment. Also, as at 30 April 1994, 1,031 absent parents had successfully applied for transitional protection. It is not a requirement of the Agency to record specific information by client group on clients who had their maintenance reduced.

I hope that this reply is helpful.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security (1) how many maintenance application forms have been returned to each Child Support Agency area reporting centre to date (a) from parents with care in receipt of income support, (b) from parents with care in receipt of family credit, (c) from parents with care in receipt of disability working allowance and (d) from parents with care not on benefit;

(2) how many non-custodial parents at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have (a) been issued with a maintenance inquiry form, (b) returned a maintenance inquiry form, (c) been assessed to pay maintenance and (d) actually paid any maintenance either to the Child Support Agency or direct to the parent with care;

(3) how many maintenance application forms have been issued by each Child Support Agency reporting centre to date (a) to parents with care in receipt of income support, (b) to parents with care in receipt of family credit, (c) to parents with care in receipt of disability working allowance and (d) to parents with care not on benefit.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 2 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Questions to the Secretary of State for Social Security about maintenance application forms and maintenance enquiry forms.

I am unable to provide you with all the information you require. The information available is shown below.

Maintenance application forms issued to September 1994

Figures on the number of absent parents who have been assessed to pay and those who are actually paying maintenance are currently being collated; there is no business need for the Agency to collate them in the form you requested. I shall write to you further when the figures are available.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many parents with care at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have (a) had a reduced benefit direction served against them and (b) suffered a benefit penalty.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 2 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the number of reduced benefit directions issued and implemented.

Figures for the number of reduced benefit directions issued are given below. All but 627 of these have been issued since April 1994. Figures are not available for the number implemented.

CSAC	Number issued
Belfast	744
Birkenhead	1,204
Dudley	995
Falkirk	2,774
Hastings	678
Plymouth	1,302
Total	7,697

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many non-custodial parents at each Child Support Agency reporting centre have (a) had deductions made from income support, (b) had wage arrestments made against them and (c) actually had their wages arrested.

Mr. Burt: The administration of the Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr Adam Ingram, dated 2 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about enforcement action taken against absent parents by the Child Support Agency.

Since the Agency's launch an estimated 31,000 absent parents have had child maintenance deducted from their benefit.

In 1993–94, 2,600 deduction from earnings orders (DEO) were issued. The information for this period was collected on a national basis only and is not broken down by Child Support Agency Centre.

Figures for DEOs issued from April 1994 to September 1994 are shown below:

DEO's	Number
Belfast	2,006
Birkenhead	1,981
Dudley	1,296
Falkirk	2,162
Hastings	2,323
Plymouth	1,702

Details of the number of DEO's implemented are not required as part of the Agency's business requirements and are not collected.

Mr. Ingram: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security what is the average maintenance payment at each Child Support Agency reporting centre.

Mr. Burt: The administration of Child Support Agency is a matter for Miss Ann Chant, the chief executive. She will write to the hon. Member.

Letter from Ann Chant to Mr. Adam Ingram, dated 2 December 1994:

I am replying to your recent Parliamentary Question to the Secretary of State for Social Security about the average maintenance payment at each Child Support Agency Centre.

Collection of data on the average amount of maintenance paid is not required to support the business needs of the Agency, and is consequently not collected by it, however the DSS conducts sampling exercises from time to time and at the end of October the national average weekly child maintenance liability is £44 a week.

Mustard Gas

Mr. Maclennan: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security how many pension awards have been made in recognition of disablement resulting from exposure to mustard gas during national service.

Mr. Arbuthnot: War pensions are payable for any disablement that is due to service in the armed forces, including national service. However, information relating to awards—if any—arising from exposure to mustard gas during national service is not available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Incapacity Assessment Panel

Mr. Flynn: To ask the Secretary of State for Social Security whether, in seeking the agreement of members of the panel on assessment of incapacity to publication of their names as mentioned in his answer of 3 November, Official Report, column 1377, he informed them of the statements made by the Minister for Social Security and Disabled People (a) in a written answer on 20 January 1994, Official Report, column 802, that the report on the proposed medical test would include the membership of the panel and (b) to Standing Committee E on 1 February 1994, that their names would be publicly available.

Mr. Hague: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to him on 25 November, Official Report, column 421.

EMPLOYMENT

Training

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what has been the total training budget in each of the last 10 years in (a) cash terms and (b) real terms;

(2) what was the total amount spent on training in each of the last 10 years; and what that figure represents per unemployed person.

Mr. Paice: The table shows expenditure on the Department's training and education programmes:

Year	£ million Cash	Real
1984–85	1,171	1,942
1985–86	1,289	2,025
1986–87	1,474	2,250
1987–88	1,650	2,391
1988–89	2,044	2,776
1989–90	2,606	3,309
1990–91	2,463	2,894
1991–92	1,995	2,205
1992–93	1,683	1,790
1993–94	1,910	1,967

Notes:

Expenditure up to and including 1990–91 is for Great Britain.

Expenditure in 1991–92 is England/Wales and expenditure from 1992–93 is England only.

Real terms figures are at 1994–95 levels.

Mr. Barron: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what was the amount spent on training by his Department per unemployed person in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Paice: The information requested is shown in the table:

Year	Amount £	Real Terms (1994–95 Prices) £
1984–85	110	180
1985–86	140	220
1986–87	180	280
1987–88	220	320
1988–89	480	650
1989–90	980	1,240
1990–91	950	1,120
1991–92	560	620
1992–93	430	460

Notes:

1. Expenditure up to and including 1990–91 is for Great Britain. Expenditure in 1991–92 is England/Wales and expenditure from 1992–93 is England only.
2. The amounts are a crude calculation which takes the total amount spent on training, education and administrative costs and divides that by the average number of unemployed people aged 18 and over.
3. For consistency, expenditure on youth programmes has been excluded from the calculations.
4. Employment measures and labour market services are excluded from the calculations.

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many weeks training were (a) offered and (b) undertaken in respect of (1) employment training, and (2) youth training by training and enterprise councils in Lincolnshire and Humberside in the last year for which figures were available; what element of this was provided by (i) a further education college, (ii) any other public sector college, (iii) an outside training provider and (iv) an employer, or prospective employer.

Mr. Paice: The information requested on training weeks offered and undertaken is shown in the table and relates to 1993-94. Information on training providers is not available.

	Youth training TWs Offered	Undertaken	Training for work TWs Offered	Undertaken
Lincolnshire TEC	209,998	204,945	[1]—	91,057
Humberside TEC	324,575	303,099	149,625	147,500

[1] In April 1993 Lincolnshire TEC became a training for work funding pilot and was contracted to deliver output only and not training weeks.

Prior Options Review Group

Mr. Milburn: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment which consultants have been engaged by the prior options review group; at what cost; and when they will report.

Miss Widdecombe: As part of the review, and following a competitive tendering process, Ernst and Young were commissioned to carry out a detailed examination of the potential and existing external markets in relation to the delivery of the services under review. They reported their findings on 28 October 1994. The cost for this research is commercial in confidence.

Employment Service (Deptford)

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many permanent staff employed by the Employment Service covering the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, Deptford have been instructed to take unpaid leave or work shorter hours; for what reasons; and if he is able to estimate the impact on the time taken to process applications and appeals.

Ms Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 2 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about the number of permanent staff employed by the Employment Service (ES) covering the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham,

Deptford instructed to take unpaid leave or to work shorter hours, for what reasons and the time taken to process applications and appeals.

The exercise you refer to is an entirely voluntary one. A note has been circulated to all staff within the London and South East Region which sets out our current staffing position in an open and honest manner and offers staff the opportunity to take special unpaid leave or to shorten their hours should they wish to do so. No pressure has been placed on any staff member to take up either of these options. Nor will it be.

Staff wishing to take leave or shorten working hours have been asked to complete a simple stencil, setting out the period of leave or hours preferred. These stencils are returned by the individual directly to a central point within the Region. Due to the simple design of the stencil, it is anticipated that applications can be cleared speedily, and certainly each form should not take no more than a few minutes to action.

Unemployment has fallen by almost 14% within London and the South East over the last twelve months, and by almost 30% in a number of Travel To Work Areas within the Region. Three quarters of ES staff are directly employed in the payment of unemployment benefit. Obviously, lower levels of unemployment mean that fewer staff are required. The offer of unpaid leave and shortened hours is one way in which we can ensure that we are not using more staff time than is required to deliver our service. We very much hope that voluntary measures of this kind will suffice since the alternatives, of reducing overall numbers, would obviously be less attractive to staff concerned. Employing more staff than are required to deliver our services would not be good value for money.

Deptford Employment Service Jobcentre is the only ES office which falls within the boundaries of the constituency of Lewisham Deptford. The Deptford office currently employs 39 permanent staff. As of 29 November, no-one from the Deptford office had applied for either special leave or shortened hours.

I hope this is helpful.

Ms Ruddock: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment how many casual staff are currently employed by the Employment Service covering the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, Deptford; and what intention there is to cut back on their numbers before the end of the financial year otherwise than to replace them with permanent staff.

Miss Widdecombe: Responsibility for the subject of the question has been delegated to the Employment Service Agency under its chief executive. I have asked him to arrange for a reply to be given.

Letter from M. E. G. Fogden to Ms Joan Ruddock, dated 2 December 1994:

The Secretary of State has asked me to reply to your question about how many casual staff are currently employed by the Employment Service (ES) covering the parliamentary constituency of Lewisham, Deptford and what intention there is to cut back on their numbers before the end of the financial year otherwise than to replace them with permanent staff.

Deptford Employment Service Jobcentre is the only ES office which falls within the boundaries of the constituency of Lewisham, Deptford. The Deptford office currently employs 39 permanent staff. There are no casual staff employed at the office.

I hope this is helpful.

Remploy

Mr. Garnier: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what targets Remploy has been set in its 1994–95 annual performance agreement.

Miss Widdecombe: I have written to the chairman of Remploy approving the 1994–95 annual performance agreement between the Department and the Company. This agreement covers the year from 1 April 1994. It has been negotiated by the chief executive of the Employment Service, on behalf of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment. The targets are:

the average number of disabled people employed by Remploy Ltd. will be at least 8,900; of which no more than 7,450 on average must be employed in factories;

at least 74 disabled employees will move from Remploy factories to Interwork having been employed there for at least one year, or from Interwork or factories to open employment;

the unit cost of Interwork should be no more than the supported employment voluntary maximum grant or £4,420;

Remploy Ltd. will keep within a unit cost target or operating deficit per disabled worker of £9,650;

Choices programme to be in place in at least 50 factories by the end of March 1995.

I have today arranged for the text of the annual performance agreement to be placed in the Library.

Long-term Unemployed

Mr. Hall: To ask the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to help the long-term unemployed find work.

Miss Widdecombe [holding answer 29 November 1994]: Next year we shall continue to offer unemployed people some 1.5 million opportunities of help. For long-term unemployed people we aim to provide the individual advice and support they need to get back to work as quickly as possible.

Through regular Restart interviews we encourage them to search for jobs actively. Jobclub and the job interview scheme help them find jobs, and present their abilities to employers effectively. Jobplan workshops and Restart courses provide opportunities for self-assessment, confidence building, and action planning. Training for work and Community Action offer them chances to learn new skills, refresh old ones, gain work experience and enhance their job skills.

On Tuesday, my right hon. and learned Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer set out our plans to develop our help to ensure that it is targeted on those who need it most—in particular, the long-term unemployed. We are focusing training for work more sharply on getting people into work. We are extending Community Action and work trials over the next three years. Following successful pilots, jobfinders grant will be available nationally. So too will Workwise and 1-2-1, providing intensive job search help for 18 to 24 year olds out of work for a year or more. New Jobmatch pilots are to be developed and Workstart pilots will be extended.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fossil Fuel Levy

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what plans he has to change the share of the fossil fuel levy allocation to renewable sources of energy.

Mr. Charles Wardle: I expect payments from the fossil fuel levy to renewable generators to increase during the 1990s, as more renewable electricity generation projects are commissioned under the non-fossil fuel obligation.

Electricity

Mrs. Anne Campbell: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what are the current levels of trade in electricity with France; and what are the projected future levels.

Mr. Charles Wardle: Statistics on United Kingdom electricity trade with France are regularly published in "Energy Trends", table 24, a copy of which is available in the Library of the House. A description of how trade across the interconnector was expected to develop in the foreseeable future was given in the Government's Coal Review White Paper, Cm 2235, at paragraphs 7.100 to 7.101.

Monopolies and Mergers Commission

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on the Monopolies and Mergers Commission report's rejection of the plans of the Daily Mail Company to acquire the seven Nottingham-based titles of T. Bailey Forman Ltd.

Mr. Eggar: I refer the hon. Member to the answer that I gave to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) on 29 November, Official Report, columns 569–70.

Training and Enterprise Councils

Mr. Harry Greenway: To ask the President of the Board of Trade how much funding has been provided to TECs for small and medium-sized businesses in the current financial year and the coming financial year; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Taylor: My Department is providing £32.7 million to TECs for enterprise activity by small and medium-sized businesses in the current financial year. A further £6 million is being provided to TECs for the diagnostic and consultancy service delivered by Business Links. My Department is also providing funding totalling £18.7 million for providing a range of advisory services in Business Links and for helping to establish the Business Link network which will mainly assist small and medium sized businesses.

I have not yet finalised my budgets for 1995–96 but I expect to do so shortly and I will provide a further answer at that time.

In addition to DTI funding, other Government Departments, notably the Employment Department provide TECs with funds which they may use to support small and medium sized businesses.

Digital Audio Broadcasting

Mr. Allen: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what his Department is doing to encourage the development by manufacturers of radio sets capable of receiving the BBC's DAB broadcasts, to be launched in 1995; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Taylor: On 16 February 1993, Official Report, column 134, my right hon. Friend the President of the Board of Trade announced to the House the setting up of a national forum to co-ordinate and promote the plans for the introduction of DAB in the UK. Participants of the forum included broadcasters, equipment manufacturers, retailers, service providers and other interested parties. They have made considerable progress over the intervening months.

One of the forum's working groups is concerned with consumer equipment for receiving DAB broadcasts. It currently numbers all of the major UK market players, including far Eastern inward investors, in its membership.

At least five of these have indicated their intentions to manufacture products in the UK once DAB chipsets become available. Another far eastern company that does not currently manufacturer in the UK has expressed a desire to develop a DAB receiver in the UK.

At the present time, however, there is a lack of DAB chipsets in commercial quantities and at commercial prices. Some UK companies have formed a club to develop a UK source of DAB chipsets to alleviate this.

Officials in my Department are giving strong encouragement to these activities.

EC Package Travel Directive

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he expects to make a further announcement on the EC package travel directive.

Mr. Ian Taylor: I expect to publish revised guidance notes to the Package Travel Regulations 1992, which implement the Package Travel Directive in UK law, within the next few weeks.

Advisory Bodies

Mr. Harvey: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will publish a table showing the number of meetings held, the secretarial and advisory arrangements, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of any reports and submissions produced by the Standards Quality and Measurement Advisory Committee in each of the last three years.

Mr. Ian Taylor: Secretarial support for the Standards, Quality and Measurement Advisory Committee has been provided by officials from the national measurement system policy unit, a section within the technology and innovation policy division of the Department.

Advisory arrangements were covered within the terms of reference for the committee. The terms of reference for the committee were:

(a) To identify and review the requirement of the United Kingdom national measurement system and the needs for its harmonisation internationally.

(b) To advise the Department on the broad objectives, balance and strategy for departmental support of metrology, including its relationship to specification standards and other quality activities.

(c) To advise the Department on the allocation of resources necessary to secure those objectives; to consider proposals referred by the Department to the committee for advice against such criteria as the Department may propose; to make recommendations for programmes to be considered by the Department; and to advise the Department on the effectiveness of its expenditure.

(d) To propose other measures which will further the objectives of the national measurement system and related activities within the committee's area of responsibility.

(e) To advise the Department on any other matters within the committee's competence.

The Standards, Quality and Measurement Advisory Committee has now become the Measurement Advisory Committee.

The table shows the number of meetings held, the budgeted and actual expenditure and the subjects of reports and submissions produced by the committee over the last three financial years.

Wave Energy

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what steps he has taken to reassess his Department's policy announcement on 31 March 1994 on the future funding for wave energy, Official Report, columns 1009–10, following the subsequent decision of the European Commission to fund the wave power device designed by Queen's university, Belfast.

Mr. Charles Wardle: The Government's strategy for the development of new and renewable energy in the United Kingdom was published on 31 March 1994 as Energy Paper No. 62, copies of which are in the Libraries of both Houses. Resources will be concentrated on key technologies with good prospects of commercial application in the coming decades—such as solar, energy from coppice and waste, wind and fuel cells. The existing work on wave energy will be completed, but no further commitments undertaken, as this technology has limited potential to contribute commercially to energy supplies in the next few decades. A watching brief on wave energy developments, including the work of Queen's university, Belfast, will be maintained. The progress of the programme and the prospects for the technologies are regularly reviewed.

Colliery Transfers

Mr. Tipping: To ask the President of the Board of Trade when he now expects the regional packages and former collieries owned by British Coal to be transferred to the private sector.

Mr. Eggar: Subject to further detailed negotiation, the Department aims to complete the sales by the end of the year.

India

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement regarding the Minister for Trade's recent visit to India as part of the Indo-British partnership technology week.

Mr. Heseltine: The technology week, which was led by my right hon. Friend the Minister for Trade, involved a series of seminars and exhibitions in Calcutta, New Delhi, Bombay and Madras. The trade mission was the largest of its kind to date.

Organised under the Indo-British partnership initiative, in which the private sector works closely with my Department, the mission was designed to demonstrate United Kingdom technological capability across a number of industrial sectors. These include infrastructure, power, electronics, food processing, design and telecommunications.

Using Concorde, itself an example of British technology, to fly more than 80 business men to the four major business centres in India enabled the mission to secure considerable additional local publicity.

I am pleased to say that more than half the business group were small to medium-sized companies, many of them visiting this undoubtedly expanding market for the first time.

During a highly successful week a significant number of business transactions were completed, as the summary shows. Other business deals are expected to develop in the future. Further events are planned for next year and beyond.

Agreements and Announcements during "Concorde Week"

	Agreement/Announcement
Rolls Royce/RPG	An agreement to refurbish power stations

Agreements and Announcements during "Concorde Week"

	Agreement/Announcement
Indo-British Partnership	Restoration of selected historic of selected historic buildings with industrial sponsorship.
Indo-British Partnership	Proposal for an industrial park in Tamil Nadu.

Opening of new factory by Munradtech (industrial generators)

New Collaborative relationship in specialised but vital area of electro-magnetic compatibility.

Also many direct deals e.g. moulded plastics/electronic testing equipment/construction.

Positive discussions on revitalisation of jute industry in West Bengal.

New commercial relationship in coal mining.

British Coal

Mr. Peter Ainsworth: To ask the President of the Board of Trade if he will make a statement on progress in discussions with the preferred bidders for the regional coal companies in the privatisation of the mining business of British Coal.

Mr. Eggar: Discussions with each of the preferred bidders—RJB Mining plc, Celtic Energy Limited and Mining (Scotland) Limited—are on course to be concluded this month.

Each of the bids has been subject to a detailed process of clarification and negotiation since preferred bidders were announced on 12 October.

The Government have agreed with RJB, subject to contract, that RJB will acquire the English Coal Company and Thorne and Ellington collieries for £815 million; £698.1 million would be payable at completion, with the balance payable, with interest, in instalments over the three following years.

The Government have agreed with Mining (Scotland) Limited, subject to contract, that Mining (Scotland) Limited will acquire the Scottish Coal Company for £39.4 million and an additional consideration, which may amount to up to £10 million, mainly for increased levels of coal stocks.

In both cases, the bid price has been adjusted as envisaged in the information memorandum. The adjustments reflect developments since tenders were submitted in September 1994 or information which was not available to bidders at the time. In the case of RJB, the bulk of the adjustments relate to changes in expected levels of coal stocks, and liabilities disclosed after bids were submitted. RJB's bid price following these adjustments still clearly represents best value for money. This is also the case for Mining (Scotland) Limited.

The Department will shortly lay minutes before the House describing certain limited warranties and indemnities which it proposes to give to RJB and Mining (Scotland) Limited. The question of possible warranties and indemnities is also under discussion with Celtic Energy Limited.

The acquisition price for all three preferred bidders would also be subject to technical adjustments following completion to take account of differences between the value of certain assets and liabilities as estimated at signature of the acquisition agreement and the corresponding value to be established as at completion.

Discussions are continuing with Celtic Energy Limited.

Nursery Furnishing

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what discussions took place with Mothercare in 1989 and 1990 over the results of its tests into cot mattresses containing toxic substances and the reasons for them replacing such mattresses at that time.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1994]: No such tests were made known to the Department during 1989 and 1990. The Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, do not specify the use of fire retardants. The regulations are made in terms of a series of ignition resistance tests for different furniture components and manufacturers can meet the required standards for mattresses safely in a number of ways.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what representations he received from industry about the adverse affects on children from the use of fire retardant chemicals in nursery furniture prior to the introduction of the legislation.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1994]: My Department consulted industry and other interested organisations when making the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988 and full consideration was given to the use of fire retardant chemicals in nursery furniture. The risk to young children of being killed or injured in fires involving nursery furniture outweighed the possibility of skin irritations to some babies, cited by industry, from contact with fire retardant chemicals. This took into account the variety of options available to industry to meet the match resistance requirements. Not all fabrics need the application of chemicals to make them match resistant.

Mr. Nigel Griffiths: To ask the President of the Board of Trade what were the reasons for his 1989 decision to (a) exempt baby nests from the provisions of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988 and (b) not exempt nursery furniture coverings from the provisions of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988.

Mr. Ian Taylor [holding answer 25 November 1994]: Baby nests were exempted from the requirements of the Furniture and Furnishings (Fire) (Safety) Regulations 1988, as amended, because of the need for them to be made of permeable materials to avoid the risk of suffocation because of the purpose of their design. Nursery furniture coverings were not exempted from fire safety protection because there is no attendant risk of suffocation.

Payment of Bills

Mr. Betts: To ask the President of the Board of Trade (1) of the bills currently awaiting payment in his Department how many are over the advised payment date by (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months respectively;

(2) how many of the bills paid by his Department during the last month for which figures are available were paid within (a) up to one month, (b) up to two months, (c) up to three months, (d) up to six months and (e) over six months from receipt of invoice; and how many were over the date for payment by (i) up to one month, (ii) up to two months, (iii) up to three months, (iv) up to six months and (v) over six months.

Mr. Heseltine [holding answer 1 December 1994]: The information is not available in the form requested. The survey of my Department's payment performance for the 1994 Trade and Industry expenditure plans report based on a sample of payments made in October 1993 stated that 90 per cent. of bills were paid either in accordance with agreed contractual conditions or, where no such contractual conditions existed, within 30 days of receipt of goods or services or the presentation of a valid invoice. A further 7 per cent. were paid within 60 days of receipt of goods or services or the presentation of a valid invoice.

TREASURY

European Communities

Mr. Peter Bottomley: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the net United Kingdom contribution to the European Community in 1992; and what he estimates it will be in 1994.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: The United Kingdom's net contribution to the European Community in 1992–93 was £2,167 million and the Government's latest estimate of our net contribution for 1994–95 is £2,446 million.

Customs and Excise

Mr. McFall: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer what changes are being considered in the deployment of officers involved in anti-smuggling activities as a result of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise fundamental expenditure review.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: Changes resulting from the Customs fundamental expenditure review are consistent with the department's existing anti-smuggling strategy and will enable Customs to play a key role in the Government's anti-drugs strategy. Customs effectiveness will not be diminished.

FER changes mean that Customs will allocate its anti-smuggling resources more effectively. There will be a focusing of static staff on areas of greatest risk. For other locations, anti-smuggling effort will be grouped together in task forces which will ensure a fast and flexible response to specific threats as well as providing high-profile deterrence. There will be a greater emphasis placed on quality results in terms of seizures and the impact that the department has on organised criminals. There will be a strengthening of the department's intelligence organisation, raising its profile and improving national co-ordination—indeed, some of the reductions in posts which result from the deployment of task forces in certain locations will be recycled into this areas.

It is too early to indicate what the implications will be at particular locations. Decisions about the deployment of Customs staff will be taken by operational managers in consultation with the centre.

EC Budget

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish the estimates given by every other EEC Government to its own people of (a) their increase in EEC budget contributions consequent on the Edinburgh agreement, (b) the payments/gains per capita and (c) whether they will be in surplus or deficit.

Mr. Heathcoat-Amory: So far as we have been able to ascertain, of other member states, only Germany has made public estimates of the impact of the Edinburgh agreement on its EC budget contribution.

A list of the factors determining the impact of Edinburgh on member states' contributions was given in my answer to the hon. Member for Moray (Mrs. Ewing) on 24 November at column 353.

Capital Gains

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer if it is his policy that the new rules in respect of capital gains tax reinvestment relief include all capital gains for reinvestment in the existing three year period.

Sir George Young: Relaxations to the rules for re-investment relief will take effect from 29 November. As before, companies will still have to meet the other qualifying conditions for three years. Full details of the proposals will be found in the Finance Bill, which is due to be published early in January.

Capital Gains

Mr. Barry Field: To ask the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he plans that the abolition of the restrictions in respect of capital gains tax reinvestment relief announced in the Budget be made to apply only to disposals on or after Budget day.

Sir George Young: Relaxation of the restrictions will affect only the activities of qualifying companies, and not individual investors in those companies. These changes take effect from 29 November. Full details of the proposals will be contained in the Finance bill, which is due to be published early in January.

DEFENCE

Air Accidents

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the accident involving a Tornado aircraft at Royal Air Force Cottesmore on 3 August.

Mr. Soames: The incident involved an Italian air force Tornado based at RAF Cottesmore, which was on this occasion being flown by a German air force instructor pilot and a German air force navigator. After a normal approach to landing with the undercarriage down and locked, the Tornado sank on to the runway with its undercarriage fully retracted. It came to rest on the runway and both crew emerged without injury.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the accident to Tornado F.3 ZG751 during 1993; and what is the current status of the aircraft.

Mr. Soames: Tornado F3 aircraft ZG751 has not been involved in any accidents since it entered service. It is currently in service with No. 11 group of the RAF. The only Tornado F3 aircraft to be involved in an accident in 1993 was ZE858. A copy of the accident summary for this aircraft is in the Library of the House.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement on the circumstances of the collision between two Royal Air Force Tornados over Canada on 1 August.

Mr. Soames: The RAF board of inquiry into this accident is not yet complete. A summary of its findings will be placed in the Library of the House in due course.

Low Flying

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library a copy of the agreement with the Italian authorities pertaining to the use by Italian Air Force combat aircraft of low flying and range facilities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Soames: No formal agreement exists. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 4 February 1994, Official Report, column 996.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the deployment of Italian Air Force AMX aircraft to (a) Royal Air Force Coningsby from 11 to 15 July, (b) Royal Air Force Cottesmore from 11 to 14 July, (c) Royal Air Force Cottesmore from 22 to 26 July, (d) Royal Air Force Waddington from 5 September and (e) Royal Air Force Cottesmore from 10 to 14 October; how many aircraft took part; which Royal Air Force unit hosted the visits; how many low-level sorties were undertaken by the aircraft during the deployment, and at what minimum permitted altitudes; and how many of these sorties included use of the Spadeadam range.

Mr. Soames: The purpose of the Italian air force deployments was to utilise the electronic warfare tactics range at RAF Spadeadam and to carry out low flying training within the United Kingdom low flying system. The authorised minimum separation distance on each occasion was 500 ft.

Details of the individual deployments are as follows:

Dates	Host station and unit	Numbers of participating aircraft	Total numbers of sorties
11–14 July	RAF Cottesmore No specific unit	6	24
11–15 July	RAF Coningsby 56 Squadron	6	24
22–26 August	RAF Cottesmore No specific unit	6	16
5–16 September	RAF Waddington	6	50
10–14 October	No specific unit RAF Cottesmore No specific unit	6	12

All of the sorties listed included use of Spadeadam range. It should be noted that the second deployment to RAF Cottesmore took place in August, and not July as stated in the question.

Correspondence

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary or State for Defence when the hon. Member for Don Valley can expect a reply to his letter of 20 May addressed to the Minister of State for the Armed Forces; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: The then Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Defence replied to the letter in question on 21 June 1994.

Air Misses

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is his policy on publication of joint air miss working group reports of air miss investigations.

Mr. Soames: Joint air miss working group reports of air miss investigations in the United Kingdom are printed three times a year by the Civil Aviation Authority and are made widely available to interested groups within the aviation community. Copies are also placed in the Library of the House and provided to the House of Commons Defence Committee. It is circulated widely to increase awareness of flight safety.

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will send to the hon. Member for Don Valley the results of the inquiry into the air miss incident on 11 November involving a helicopter and a Tornado jet aircraft near Mablethorpe, Lincolnshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: A copy of the report of the investigation into this occurrence, which took place on 5 November 1993, is included in the joint air miss working group's "Analysis of Air Misses in the United Kingdom, Report No. 3/93", a copy of which has been placed in the Library of the House. As a result of this report, crews have been reminded of the continuing need for extra vigilance during flying training.

Officer Selection

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will introduce the requirement that all candidates for officer selection shall have served a minimum of one year in the ranks.

Mr. Soames: There are already arrangements in each of the services to commission suitably qualified personnel from the ranks, including those of junior rank. We have no plans to introduce a requirement that all candidates for officer selection serve a minimum of one year in the ranks as this is considered neither essential nor cost-effective.

Spitfire

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what action he is taking to preserve the Battle of Britain Flight Supermarine P.R. XIX Spitfire that has currently been put up for auction; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Soames: None. The Spitfire Mk XIX which was sold at auction on 26 November was on of five airworthy Spitfires operated by the Battle of Britain memorial flight, including two other Mk XIX variants. The four remaining airworthy Spitfires are adequate to ensure representation of the aircraft in future BBMF activities. Proceeds from the sale of the Spitfire will meet most of the costs of restoring the flight's Hurricane.

Italian Air Force

Mr. Redmond: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what was the purpose of the flight by four Italian air force AMX aircraft from RAF Coningsby to the Loch Ness area on 14 July.

Mr. Soames: The purpose of the flight, which was properly authorised, was to carry out low-level training and to utilise the electronic warfare tactics range at RAF Spadeadam.

Royal Marine Reserve

Mr. Trotter: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the current strength of the Royal Marine Reserve in each of the five main centres and 12 smaller detachments.

Mr. Soames: The information requested, as at 1 November 1994, is as follows:

RMR	Centre	Total Strength	Detachments
RMR	London	19	London—99 Chatham—20 Henley on Thames—30 Portsmouth—42
RMR	Scotland	172	Glasgow—94 Greenock—26 Grangemouth—18 Dundee—34
RMR	Bristol	267	Bristol—90 Cardiff—32 Poole—46 Lympstone—46 Plymouth—53
RMR	Merseyside	198	Liverpool—121 Rochdale—53 Birmingham—24
RMR	Tyne	179	(no detachments)

Bombing (Bihac)

Mr. Austin Mitchell: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will place in the Library aerial and ground photographs of the bomb craters and bomb damage at Bihac caused by aircraft attack.

Mr. Soames: There is no aerial or ground photographic evidence of bomb craters or bomb damage in Bihac available.

Hercules Aircraft

Mr. Hoyle: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence when he now expects the decision on the replacement for FLAC130J.

Mr. Freeman: We hope to be in a position to make an announcement on tranche 1 of the Hercules rolling replacement programme shortly.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what is the timetable for an announcement of his decision on the replacement of the Hercules C-130.

Mr. Freeman: We hope to be in a position to make an announcement shortly.

Dr. David Clark: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence what offers he has received from British Aerospace to offset the cost of maintaining and repairing of the existing fleet of Hercules C-130s.

Mr. Freeman: British Aerospace forwarded a proposal for the maintenance of the existing Hercules fleet on 3 November this year.

Contracts (Former Personnel)

Mr. Campbell-Savours: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence (1) how many (a) senior officers of the armed forces and (b) civil servants of assistant secretary grade or above have in each year since 1979 within two years of leaving their posts joined companies engaged in contracts with his Department; and for each year how many in each rank in both the armed forces and the civil service did so;

(2) how many (a) senior officers of the armed forces and (b) civil servants have within two years of leaving the armed forces joined companies engaged on contracts with his Department since 4 May 1979.

Mr. Freeman: My Department keeps no record of this information.

Operation Seafire

Mr. Ainger: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence if he will list the times at which, during exercise Operation Seafire on 17 October off the west Wales coast a helicopter from RAF Chivenor (a) was alerted, (b) was tasked, (c) took off from Chivenor, (d) landed at Menistan, (e) took off from Menistan, (f) arrived over the casualty and (g) began lowering fire fighters.

Mr. Soames: Exercise Seafire took place on 10 October. RAF records show the times requested as:

	Times requested
Helicopter alerted.	0620
Helicopter tasked.	0635
Helicopter took off from RAF Chivenor.	0645
Helicopter landed Morriston.	0705 approximately
Helicopter took off from Morriston.	0710 approximately

	Times requested
Helicopter arrived over the ferry.	0730 approximately
Helicopter began lowering fire fighters.	0735 approximately

The response was well within the guidelines laid down for civil search and rescue operations. The answer given to the hon. Member for Pembroke (Mr. Ainger) on 23 November, Official Report, column 148, unfortunately contained an error; the distance from RAF Chivenor to the rendezvous point is 36 nautical miles, not 86 nautical miles.

Military Corrective Training Centre, Colchester

Mr. Meale: To ask the Secretary of State for Defence for how long the military corrective training centre at Colchester has been operational; and how many (a) escapes and (b) attempted escapes have occurred at the establishment since it opened.

Mr. Soames: The military corrective training centre has been in operation since 1 January 1956. Since then there has been a recorded total of 215 escapes and 38 attempted escapes, most of which took place between 1956 and 1961. Since 1990, there have been a total of four recorded escapes and no attempts.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

British-Japanese Parliamentary Group

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what he said about the role of THORP in United Kingdom-Japanese trade at the British-Japanese parliamentary group in London on 23 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: The role of THORP in UK-Japanese trade was not mentioned in my right hon. Friend's speech to the UK-Japan parliamentary group seminar. However, in response to a question from the floor regarding the recovery of plutonium from reprocessing spent fuel from countries such as Japan, he explained that all views had been carefully considered before the decision was taken in favour of going ahead with THORP. We attach great importance to the continuance of such trade with Japan, which is commercially beneficial to both countries.

Mr. Llew Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will place in the Library a copy of his speech to the British-Japanese parliamentary group in London on 23 November.

Mr. Goodlad: No transcript of my right hon. Friend's remarks on this occasion is available.

Slovenia

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relationship with Slovenia; what ministerial visits have taken place there in the past 12 months; what bilateral trade initiatives and contracts the United Kingdom has with that country; and how many official Slovenian visits have been made to the United Kingdom in the past year.

Mr. David Davis: Relations between the United Kingdom and Slovenia are very good. In the past year there have been visits to Slovenia by two British Ministers and four Slovenian Ministers have visited the UK. Prime Minister Drnovšek also paid a visit as a guest of Government from 7 to 9 November.

As a result of an increase in interest being shown by British companies in Slovenia, which has recently entered into our top 80 list of overseas markets, the DTI has recently appointed an export promoter to cover the country. A trade mission is also due to visit Slovenia from 5 to 9 December.

Iraq

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy that United Nations sanctions should not be lifted until all United National resolutions against Iraq have been complied with, with particular reference to the release of missing Kuwaitis.

Mr. David Davis: The UN has repeatedly made clear to the Iraqi regime that there can be no question of relaxing sanctions until they are in full compliance with the relevant UN Security Council resolutions. We raise the subject of missing Kuwaitis and other third country nationals at every opportunity for example, when the Security Council last reviewed sanctions on 14 November.

Lady Olga Maitland: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what progress has been made in talks with the Iraquis in relation to Kuwaiti detainees and prisoners of war.

Mr. David Davis: Iraq is beginning to co-operate with the ICRC in commenting on ICRC case files on missing persons passed to Iraq over 18 months ago. It has so far offered an incomplete response on 127 of the 609 case files. The tripartite commission will meet again on 8 December to review progress and approve the establishment of a technical sub-commission to speed up the substantive review of the case files. We continue to attach great importance to this issue.

Estonia

Sir Dudley Smith: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's relationship with Estonia; what ministerial visits have taken place there in the past 12 months; what bilateral trade initiatives and contracts the United Kingdom has with that country; and how many official Estonian visits have been made to the United Kingdom in the past year.

Mr. David Davis: We have good relations with Estonia based on our strong support for her independence and democratic and economic development. My right hon. Friends the Foreign Secretary and the Secretary of State for Defence, my right hon. and learned Friend the Minister of State, Foreign and Commonwealth Office, have visited Estonia in the past 12 months. We are actively promoting trade and investment, for example through the appointment of an export promoter and support for trade-related events. There have been four visits by Estonian Ministers, including the then Prime Minister, to the United Kingdom in the past year, and numerous other official visits.

UN Year of Tolerance

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the Government's policy regarding the UN Year of Tolerance 1995.

Mr. Baldry: We are content that non-governmental organisations should play an active role in the activities of the UN Year of Tolerance 1995, but it is not our policy, given heavy demands on public expenditure, to commit scarce resources to the marking of UN years dedicated to specific themes. We therefore have no plans at present to engage in specific activity to mark this UN year.

UNESCO

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what discussions he has had with his counterpart in South Africa regarding membership of UNESCO; and what assessment he makes of the impact of South Africa's policy on UNESCO.

Mr. Baldry: My right hon. Friend has not had any discussions with his South African counterpart regarding membership of UNESCO. I understand, however, that the Government of South Africa have expressed the wish to rejoin the organisation but as of yet has not done so.

The South African Government's position on UNESCO has been noted. We are keeping the question of a United Kingdom return to UNESCO under close review. For the moment, however, we have taken no decision.

EU Council

Dr. Spink: To ask the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs, if he will publish a statement on the forthcoming business in the Council of the European Union.

Mr. David Davis: The information is as follows:

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 250

SESSION 1994–95

16th November—2nd December 1994

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes and cannot therefore, be used in connection with the daily part or weekly Hansard. For these versions use the Fortnightly Index.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There are, however, the headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one can find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instruments etc, under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Speaker and deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speaker's rulings and statements'.

Other contributions by Speaker and deputies appear under the heading Speaker.

Opposition Day Debates and Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates, etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R = first reading, 2R = second reading, Money res = money resolution, Comm = Committee stage, Rep = Report stage, 3R = third reading, amendt/amendts = amendment/amendments, * = matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of each daily part or volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
